INTRODUCTION

JOHN R. MOTT

Chairman of the International Missionary Council

We have been passing through the world's most prolonged, wide-spread, and intense period of depression. It has been a time of great social and political upheavals; a time of wars and rumors of wars. It has been a period characterized by the development of ultra-nationalism, and of grave international misunderstanding, bitterness and strife. They have been years of religious persecution and of real menace to religious liberty. All peoples are bearing impossible burdens. On every hand there is still much distrust and fear, and a haunting sense of uncertainty and insecurity.

All this has profoundly affected all nations and all social, industrial, educational and religious organizations and movements. All are still being tested as by fire. The world mission of the Christian Church, in some respects the most wide-spread of all movements, has been no exception. Under the influence of this overwhelming and baffling situation discerning leaders of the older churches of Europe, North America, and Australasia and of the younger churches of Asia, Africa, and Latin America decided in 1935 that the International Missionary Council should call a world conference to meet by the close of 1938. The call was issued, therefore, for the gathering to meet in the Madras Christian College, near Madras, India, in December of that year. It was agreed in connection with this action that there should be made a statistical survey of the world mission. This was deemed essential in view of the stupendous changes in the world and likewise in view of developments in the world mission of Christianity since the last comprehensive survey was made in 1925 in connection with the World Missionary Atlas. It was recognized that the time available for the purpose—less than three years, if the results were to be available for the Conference in India—was all too short. Notwithstanding the brevity of the time and other limitations it was believed that the arguments for going ahead with the project outweighed the arguments against doing so. Therefore, a special Survey Committee was appointed, composed of Dr. John R. Mott, Chairman, Miss Mabel Emerson, Mr. Charles H. Fahs, Professor Daniel J. Fleming, Dr. George B. Huntington, Canon H. E. Hyde, Professor Kenneth S. Latourette, Dr. E. C. Lobenstine, the Rev. Alexander McLeish, the Rev. William Paton, Miss Esther Strong, Professor Julius Richter, Dr. A. L. Warnshuis and Professor K. B. Westman. A capable director was secured and the project was promptly launched. The result is the work herewith presented and commended to the careful consideration not only of all delegates to Madras but also of leaders, friends and supporters of the missionary enterprise throughout the world.

This survey has two outstanding and distinctive features. In the first place, the organizing or governing factor is the so-called younger churches, that is, the rising indigenous churches. It is recognized that since the valuable survey of 1925 there has been a marked shifting of the center of gravity from the missionary societies and the missions to the Churches established by the missionaries. This fact alone lends very special interest and value to this world survey. The other distinguishing aspect of the study is the series of interpretative articles accompanying the statistical tables—articles written by recognized authorities who, as a result of knowledge, experience and relationships, are qualified to estimate the statistical facts and their significance. Wherever possible these writers have compared the present tables with those of earlier surveys and with official missionary year books. This has thrown light on contrasts and trends. The writers were requested to call attention not only to favorable and reassuring facts but also to those of an unfavorable or disappointing character. It is believed that these interpretations will facilitate an understanding of the present position and outlook of the missionary enterprise, also of its perils and possibilities; stimulate a more scientific study of major unsolved problems; and suggest needed changes in programs and policies.

Owing to the shortness of time available when the decision was made to have a fresh world survey (less than three years), it was evident that it would be impossible to do what was feasible in connection with the previous survey of 1925, namely, to utilize a wide variety of sources including correspondence. We were compelled to base the desired new survey on the existing official printed statistics of each society or agency for the working year 1935-36, as reported in the year 1936-37. The results thus assembled were checked by the societies, after which the figures approved were used for the final tabulations. It is believed that between 90 and 95 per cent. of the Protestant mission work has been reported and included in the survey.

It should be noted that the Director, Mr. Joseph I. Parker, and those associated with him, have used only the statistics furnished by the missionary societies in official reports and have not given estimates of their own. If there are omissions, discrepancies and errors, as doubtless there are, the fault rests not on them but upon the official reports placed at their disposal. Cases in which this statement may need to be qualified are dealt with in the Director's explanatory notes and footnotes. In such a work there are inescapable difficulties due to the lack of uniform categories, definitions and interpretations in connection with the statistical procedures of different countries, different types of work, and different societies. It should be pointed out also that there have been baffling difficulties incident to the transition from mission control to church control. In most cases there has not been time for the new or younger churches to develop schedules of data desired and their techniques with reference to assembling, recording and reporting information. Add to all this the great depletion of staffs in the offices of missionary societies and national Christian councils in recent years, and the limited staff at the service of the Director, it is indeed remarkable that it has been found possible to present a survey so complete and helpful as the one now issued. We owe much not only to the conscientious, indefatigable and careful work of the Director, but also to the large and successful experience and wise counsel of his special consultant, Mr. Charles H. Fahs, and the invaluable collaboration of the Rev. Alexander McLeish of the World Dominion Movement, Professor Julius Richter, Dr. E. C. Lobenstine, Professor Kenneth S. Latourette, and the other members of the Survey Committee.

The most conspicuous and reassuring fact, let it be reiterated, with reference to this survey, compared with earlier studies, is the central prominence in such a survey of the section on the "Field Churches" (younger churches). What a change this indicates in missionary orientation and policy!

The marked increase in the size and maturity of the indigenous or native Christian clientele or constituency affords ground for great encouragement. In field after field this increase, in contrast with previous decades, has been at a geometrical rate, notably in parts of Africa and India, and in the Netherlands Indies. In some fields the rate of increase in number of converts has been more rapid than the growth in population. The total Protestant Christian constituency has expanded in round numbers within the decade from 8,340,000 to 13,036,000 or more than in the preceding twenty-four years.

While the statistical returns dealing with finance are incomplete, especially for comparative purposes, owing to the fact that in earlier studies this group of facts was so largely left out of consideration, sufficient evidence has been afforded to justify the statement that even the recent period of world-wide depression has witnessed gratifying progress toward self-support.

The extent to which the national churches have taken over the direction of educational institutions, formerly controlled and supported largely by the missions, is one of the most significant developments of recent years, although this is only inadequately revealed in current statistics. Quite as significant in certain fields, notably China, has been the growing volume of financial support from indigenous sources.

One of the most interesting developments has been the remarkable increase on the part of nationals in the sphere of medical missionary work. The number of national physicians, men and women, has increased since 1925 from 612 to 1,346 (not including the Balkans) and the increase in the number of nurses among the nationals has been much greater. The increase in the number of hospitals and of bed capacity has also been very considerable.

The expansion in the circulation of the Scriptures has been phenomenal in almost every field, and the work of Bible translation, especially in Africa, has been unprecedented.

Statistical tables cannot reflect fully the great advance in coöperation, but they do reveal marked progress in the federation and organic union of churches and in the multiplication on every hand of union institutions—educational, medical, literary, rural, and evangelistic.

The popular impression obtains that there has been during the long continued period of depression a vast and an alarming shrinkage in the number of foreign missionaries. While this has been tragically true in the case of certain missionary societies and in case of certain fields, especially in Asia, the fact remains that taking Asia, Africa, Latin America as a whole (but not including missionaries among Indians and Eskimos in North America and among Orientals in America and England), the number of missionaries decreased from 28,010 in 1925 to 27,483 (not including the Balkans) or only 527. While the situation is not as serious as was generally feared before the current survey was completed, it is a ground for real solicitude that the missionary establishment has been so weakened at the time of admittedly greatest need and opportunity. In this respect the Church of Rome, in increasing its missionary forces rather than diminishing them, has been more far-sighted and wiser. While the matter of function, qualifications and specialized training must receive special attention, the question of numbers is one of coordinate importance. There still remains a question whether the steadying of missionary personnel in respect to numbers during the long depression has not been due in considerable measure to increased activity of the faith or independent missions.

Another serious concern is the fact that the number of qualified national pastors is evidently not keeping pace with the growth in numbers and intelligence of the Christian community, and also in the growth of literacy of the non-Christian community. There is no one thing calling for more prompt, thorough, and cooperative planning and action.

A study of the location or distribution of the Christian workers, as well as of their numbers, suggests the desirability of a study of their possible better realignment. This is necessary in any prolonged and widely extended program.

One of the most unsatisfactory parts of the survey is that related to philanthropic and social betterment work. The material submitted from different fields is quite inadequate, whereas it is known that in many fields there has been a large, impressive, and very fruitful expansion of such action. In reality it constitutes one of the most powerful apologetics for the Christian enterprise. It is unfortunate not to have it fully set forth although it must be said that much of it does not lend itself to statistical presentation.

A most disconcerting and solemnizing fact revealed by this survey, when compared with earlier studies of the last three decades, is the virtually negligible progress being made in reaching the unoccupied fields. One need only review the report of Commission I on the Occupation of the Field presented at the World Missionary Conference of 1910, to be fully convinced. Here we have in mind not only the totally unoccupied fields, but also those extensive areas and large groups within so-called occupied lands, and, one may well add, so-called Christian lands. The population of the world is estimated at 2,095,000,000 of which approximately one third are related to the three great Christian communions—Protestant, Roman Catholic, and Orthodox. Thus we have today some 28,000 Protestant missionaries and 13,000,000 members of the Protestant Christian constituency among fully 1,377,000,000 non-Christians. Apart from considerations of geography and population we need to remind ourselves afresh of the forces arrayed against us, as set forth by Dr. Kraemer in The Christian Message in a Non-Christian World, to realize the real dimensions of our task.

The dominant impression made upon one by a discerning study of the statistical tables and of the interpretative articles is one hopeful and reassuring. If the gaps known to exist were filled it is the belief of many of our best informed leaders that this impression would be confirmed and deepened. Moreover, we must always bear in mind that, indispensable and invaluable though the statistical facts and their comparative study and realistic application are, they cannot express adequately many of the human and none of the superhuman facts and forces. In other words, statistics and their interpretation are not ends in themselves but means for multiplying contacts with the ever-living and ever-creative God in order that His wide and far-reaching designs may be fulfilled.

It has been recognized that one of the principal benefits to be derived from the experiences in connection with the present survey will be that of the guidance it may afford in developing a wise permanent procedure for fostering and constantly improving such work in the future. Thus this survey should be regarded as a beginning and not a point at which to stop. It has revealed in many directions the need of expert, continuing and continuous study.

Most mission boards and most national Christian councils are not at a stage where we can look to them to supply all that is needed in the way of facts, or to facilitate studies calculated to answer outstanding and urgent questions. Some of the boards and councils are less adequately staffed than a decade ago. With few exceptions all of them need much more nearly up-to-date facilities for assembling, filing, and making available essential reliable information. Has not the time come to establish a central bureau under the general auspices of the International Missionary Council, with the collaboration of that experienced body, the World Dominion Movement, for the purpose of gathering and making widely available essential information in furtherance of the most vital objects of the world mission? There certainly is need for the fateful period which lies ahead of more continuous, more inclusive, more critically objective study of fields, peoples, issues, requirements and resources. To this end, it is hoped that at the approaching world gathering in India there may be worked out a program and plan which will enlist the full support of both younger and older churches.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Many organizations and individuals have contributed helpfully to the preparation of this Survey. The Executive Committee, consisting of Dr. John R. Mott, Chairman, Mr. Charles H. Fahs, Dr. George B. Huntington, Dr. E. C. Lobenstine, Miss Esther B. Strong and Dr. A. L. Warnshuis, have been unfailing in their attention to every matter requiring their consideration. Dr. Julius Richter and the Rev. Alexander McLeish have met with the committee whenever possible and have been particularly helpful in the planning of the scope and categories of the survey.

Assistance in securing reports and statistics from particular sections of the world has been given wholeheartedly by Pastor Axel Holt for Denmark, Dr. W. Freytag for Germany, Mr. Christian Dons and Pastor Fr. Bjertnes for Norway, Prof. K. B. Westman and Pastor Sigfrid Alm for Sweden, Canon H. E. Hyde for the Church of England, Miss B. D. Gibson for Africa, Dr. H. Wakelin Coxill for the Belgian Congo, the Rev. Charles L. Boynton for China, the Rev. Alexander McLeish for India, Dr. James L. Maxwell for medical reports from China and Dr. B. C. Oliver for medical reports from India. Secretaries of many of the National Christian Councils in various fields have also been of great assistance in checking and securing reports for their areas.

Throughout the study the editor has had the help of a small but efficient staff. The Rev. Jacob F. Peat has assisted in preparing the statistical material; Miss Barbara Parker and Miss Frances Farrell have helped in research work and have been responsible for secretarial duties. Mr. Charles H. Fahs has acted as special consultant. His experience as an editor of previous surveys has made his help of inestimable value.

A special debt of gratitude is due the Missionary Research Library in New York City for the constant help of the library staff; also to Union Theological Seminary for the provision of working space for the staff during the earlier stages of the study.

The World Dominion Movement has cooperated to the fullest extent both by direct grants of funds and by making available information at its headquarters. Its secretaries have been very helpful at many points.

The National Office of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith has cooperated fully in making available information and statistics of the Roman Catholic missions.

Macmillan and Company have kindly permitted the quotation of figures from the STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK for areas and populations.

The authors of interpretative articles (see Authors' Who's Who, page 321) have been very gracious in the giving of time and thought to the preparation of the interpretations. Officials of boards, missions and churches, and many missionaries have been very helpful in replying to requests for information. Mention of all who have given effective help would require many more specific acknowledgments than space permits.

THOUGHTS ON THE STATISTICAL SURVEY

*To whom a talent by the Lord is lent
Makes it his constant care, with labour fine,
To hold it as a trust. His life is spent
In striving to interpret the divine.
He will create, of sound or hue or line,
A thing of beauty; for his high intent
Is of his skill to make a sacrament
The glory of his Master to enshrine.*

*No less, to the discerning, to the wise,
These figures—rank on rank, austere yet fair,
Assembled patiently with ordered care—
These too assume a sacramental guise;
And human lives behind the figures show
The Master moving in His Church below.*

Part One
STATISTICAL TABLES

EXPLANATORY NOTES

Limitations of This Survey. In planning the Survey the Committee in charge designated certain limitations under which it should be carried out: (a) the time within which the Survey should be completed; (b) the financial resources available for the study; and (c) with the exception of medical work, the reports of mission boards and other agencies were to be the sources used.

The procedure followed by the staff was to glean the statistics from the report of a given society. The results were then sent to the society headquarters for checking, after which the figures as approved were used for final tabulation. In the case of the medical statistics, questionnaires were sent to the fields, the returns being supplemented by information gathered from printed reports.

For certain societies, reports were either unavailable or were quite inadequate. No attempt has been made to supply missing figures by estimates; accordingly, the totals offered are not subject to discount because of editorial optimism. It is believed that 90 to 95 per cent. of the Protestant mission work has been reported although with varying degrees of completeness.

Order of Geographical Areas. The geographical order used is that of the World Missionary Atlas of 1925 which in the main started with the Far East and followed a general westerly course. The same order is followed in all tables except for the Abridged Summary by Societies, in which the geographical areas are arranged alphabetically.

Burma and Ceylon. In this Survey, Burma and Ceylon are treated as geographical units independent of India. India totals do not include Burma and Ceylon figures.

Tables. Eight detailed tables and two summary tables are presented. These are: I, Church on the Field; II, Foreign Staff; III, Finance; IV, Education, divided into sections to show the different grades of educational work; V, Medical; VI, Philanthropic. [Two summary tables are offered for Tables I to VI: (1) Summary by Geographical Areas, and (2) Abridged Summary by Societies. The latter shows the amount of work each society is doing either in its one or several fields.] VII, Other Agencies, including the Salvation Army, Bible Societies and the Christian Associations; VIII, Roman Catholic missions. Tables I to VII cover the Protestant missionary enterprise. Figures for Table VIII were furnished by the National Office of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith.

Order of Tables. The order in which the tables are presented has been changed slightly from that used in the World Missionary Atlas of 1925. The church on the field is presented as Table I. This has been done because of the growing importance of an emphasis on the field churches. This is also the reason for the order of the sections within each table where the order followed is field churches, organizations with headquarters on the field followed by the sections relating to sending countries. The national or native staff is not shown completely on the Church Table. Those workers related to evangelistic work appear in the last three columns of the Church Table while the teachers are reported in the last two columns of Table IV-A and the medical workers in the first columns of Table V.

The Church of England. The missionary societies of the Church of England are listed under the Church of England and under Great Britain for each area where these societies, or any of them are at work. For treatment of reports of diocesan work see the two following paragraphs and also a reference under "Italics" below.

The Church of the Province of South Africa. The work of the Church of England in South Africa, South-West Africa and Southern Rhodesia is referred to under the Church of the Province of South Africa and listed under South African Societies.

The Church of India, Burma, and Ceylon. Reports of the Dioceses are listed under this name in the Church section of the three countries concerned inasmuch as this Church was legally separated from the Church of England on March 1, 1930.

Danish Societies. Reports of several Danish Missionary Societies were received much too late to be included in the tables. The statistics in brief for these are as follows: Danish Church Mission in Arabia, Missionaries 9, Churches 1, Communicants 4, Elementary Pupils 40; Dansk Forent Sudan Mission in Nigeria, Missionaries 27, Native Staff 55, Churches 11, Total Baptized 450, Elementary Schools 16, Pupils 600; Osterlands Missionen in Syria, Missionaries 15, Native Staff 41, Churches 5, Communicants 90, Elementary Schools 8, Pupils 619; Porto Novo Missionen in South India, Missionaries 2, Elementary Pupils 20. The Mission Union of the Danish Moravians is reported as a part of the British, Dutch and German Moravian societies in the following countries: South Africa, Palestine, West Indies, Dutch Guiana, and Tanganyika.

Brethren. This name in the list of societies does not refer to an organized society but represents the work of the Plymouth Brethren. This corresponds to the entries in the Atlases of 1903, 1911 and 1925 under the name of "Christian Missions in Many Lands." The Plymouth Brethren as a group have no organized missionary society but many missionaries from this group are working independently on the mission field.

Ethiopia. Since the period of the reports used for this study conditions in Ethiopia have greatly changed, and much of the work in that country has been discontinued.

Women's Societies. Where a women's society has its own administrative status, it has either been entered separately or if its returns have been included with those of a general society, this fact is so indicated in the name or by a footnote.

Italics. In many cases, a society is in union with, or cooperates with, another body on the field. Italics have been used throughout the statistical tables to show figures which pertain to the society concerned but which are also included with those of another body. This has been done in order that the society may receive appropriate credit for its share of the work. Statistics in italics are not included in the total for the section or in the grand total for the country.

In attempting to distribute statistics which involved duplication numerous problems arose and at many points arbitrary decisions became necessary. This is particularly true in the case of the Church of England for whose work often both diocesan and missionary society returns were available. In the main, missionary society returns have been given preference since frequently the diocesan statistics covered work in addition to that usually included under missions. Where society figures were not available, however, the diocesan returns have been used.

In the case of the finance table it was particularly difficult to discover the overlapping of appropriations to union institutions. Where there was no indication of distribution of income by sources the entire sum was retained under the union institution heading.

Areas for Which No Tables Are Given. Protestant mission work in Europe is not represented in these tables except certain work in the Balkans and for work in that portion of Turkey which lies within Europe.

On account of the incompleteness of the returns covering work for Eskimos, Indians and Asiatics in the United States, Canada and Alaska, all statistics for work among these groups are omitted. This fact should be kept in mind in all comparisons of grand totals with those of the World Missionary Atlas of 1925.

It was not found practicable to show returns for the Russian Orthodox Church owing to the difficulty of securing satisfactory data.

Classification of Societies and Errata. The grouping of societies under geographical headings has been determined by the location of the administrative offices of the respective societies. In a number of cases difficulty has been found in determining the locations of these headquarters. After the tables were in type a number of cases were found in which changes of classification might have been made. Such are the following:

- (a) These missions have headquarters outside of India:
 - British: Central India Mission, Poona and Indian Village Mission
 - Continental: Santal Mission of the Northern Churches
 - North American: Free Gospel Mission
- (b) The following should have been listed as Union Work instead of India Societies: Henry Martyn School, Serampore College, Benares United City Mission.
- (c) The Norwegian Evangelical mission has headquarters in Norway instead of in China.
- (d) International Societies: Two societies listed under the heading of British Societies are in reality international in character. The reports used originated in the British headquarters. These are the Sudan Interior Mission and the Africa Inland Mission. In the case of the Africa Inland Mission, reports were received only after the tables were in type. Owing to space limitations it was impossible to insert the figures in the tables under an extra heading (International). It therefore appears under the British heading where space permitted.

Period Covered. The statistics presented are for the year 1935-36 as reported in 1936-37.

x Data not reported.

† The figures in this table have been kindly furnished by the office of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith. They are 1933 statistics as given in the official Roman Catholic Directory. Italics indicate figures which make up the India total.

* Figures for this country or section refer only to missionary work; they do not report the whole of the Roman Catholic Church.

‡ These figures are not a part of the work of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith but are added here to give a complete record of the Roman Catholic Church in India.

Table I

THE CHURCH ON THE FIELD

EXPLANATORY NOTES

Organized Churches and Other Places of Worship.

In many reports the institutions recorded in Columns 1 and 2 are not distinguishable. Also, some measure of overlapping in these columns has been unavoidable because of differences in methods of reporting. Variations for the following societies should be noted: The Church Missionary Society figures in Column 1 are frequently only mission residence stations. Figures in Column 2 include organized churches. The two columns should be considered together. The London Missionary Society has in most cases included all churches, whether organized or not, under Column 2.

Membership. Columns 3 to 7 deal with membership. Various methods of recording membership made the selection of categories particularly difficult. For each entry Column 5 is a total of Columns 3 and 4 and Column 7 is a total of Columns 5 and 6. Certain societies report membership under one rubric only. In such cases this figure is given in Column 3 and repeated in Columns 5 and 7. Column 7 should not be interpreted as presenting returns for the "Total Christian Community." Instead it offers only a total of communicants, preparatory members, and inquirers who are under definite Christian instruction.

Field Churches. Difficulty has been encountered in determining organizations to be included in this classification. Where field directories have been available, as a rule their listing has been followed. In China there are a number of churches related to missionary societies whose degree of autonomy was not ascertainable at the time of arranging the tables. It was therefore thought advisable to include only those which are listed in the "1936 Handbook of the Christian Movement in China." The "Directory of Christian Missions and Churches in India, Burma, and Ceylon" and the "Japan Christian Year Book" have been used as authoritative sources for those two countries. In South Africa the question is extremely involved. There are numerous independent native churches for which reports were not available. This survey has not attempted to deal with this situation. Doubtless churches other than those listed might or should be included. More research than was practicable within the limits of this study would be required to determine what and where these are.

FOREIGN STAFF

EXPLANATORY NOTES

Dates. Dates of first work in a particular field are given as reported by the societies concerned. Where no dates were reported, those given in the World Missionary Atlas of 1925 are repeated.

Lingnan University. The foreign staff of Lingnan University, inadvertently omitted from the table, is as follows: Total 35; one ordained man; thirteen unordained men; fourteen wives; and seven single women.

Anatolia College. Anatolia staff figures should be in italics.

Staff. Some societies do not appoint wives as missionaries and therefore do not report them in their statistics. Wherever records were available, wives have been entered as missionaries.

Medical staff figures were taken from the medical questionnaires but have been supplemented from Society reports. Medical Workers have been included in Columns 3 to 7.

Residence Stations. The total of residence stations is necessarily greater than the individual number of stations occupied since several societies may report the same city or town as a station. It has not been found practicable to eliminate such duplications. Also, in many cases no residence stations were reported by the society.

FINANCE

EXPLANATORY NOTES

For the first time in this kind of a Survey detailed finance figures are given. Columns 1 to 4 refer to appropriations to the mission field by sending societies. Other expenditures such as overhead, publicity expenses, etc., are not included. Many societies do not report the amounts which might have been recorded in Columns 1 and 2. The totals of entries in these two columns, therefore, is less than the corresponding entries in Column 3. In Columns 5 to 9 are shown the amounts received on the field for various purposes.

Church of Scotland. The entire appropriation has been listed in Column I. This includes amounts for work appropriation (Column 2). Information was not available for distribution.

German Societies. Finance figures have not been available for these societies.

Italics. Where both a sending society and a field institution report practically the same figures, in one case or the other the figures are italicized. As a general rule, appropriations have been credited to the sending societies while field income has been credited to the church, school, or hospital, etc.

Anatolia College figures should be in italics.

Dollars and Pounds. Totals are given in pounds as well as in dollars for the convenience of those who are more familiar with English currency. The totals in pounds (Columns 4 and 10) are repetitions of the totals in dollars (Columns 3 and 9). During 1935 the exchange rate averaged about $5.00 to £1, the rate that has been used.

Exchange. Exchange rates for 1935 were determined by getting a record of the average transactions of several of the large mission boards, also the exchange records of a leading New York Bank.

The following figures are in American currency and represent 100 units of currency of the country indicated: Japan 29, China 28, Philippines 50, Netherlands Indies 68, India 28, Angola 4, Belgian Congo 4, Bolivia 20, Argentina 27.50, Mexico 28, Peru 25, Madeira 13.68, Singapore 58, Brazil 8.29, Finland 2.16, Norway 24.27, Sweden 25.27, Denmark 21.88, Switzerland 22.50, France 6.50. The unit of Rhodesia is the pound which is practically equal to the English pound.

EDUCATIONAL

EXPLANATORY NOTES

Sections of Table

- A. Primary, Secondary and Special Schools, and total staff for all Schools
- B. Kindergartens
- C. Bible Training Schools
- D. Theological Schools
- E. Teacher Training Schools
- F. Colleges
- G. Medical Colleges

No scientific or uniform classification of institutions has been attempted. They are entered as reported by the societies.

Variety in Reporting. Some societies have given only a total of schools of all grades. These totals appear in the Elementary columns and are not distributed for other sections of the tables. In such instances the schools of higher grades are not shown. Footnotes for the General Education Table indicate wherever this has occurred. The two principal cases of reporting all schools under one category are the Church Missionary Society and the London Missionary Society.

Boys and Girls. Many societies report the total number of pupils without distribution by sexes. Accordingly, in many cases, the figures in Columns 3 and 4, and those in 7 and 8, which deal with boy and girl pupils, or with men and women students, do not equal the corresponding total numbers of pupils entered in Columns 2 and 6.

Section A, Special Schools. Special schools include all schools which could not be classified under other headings. For the most part, these are industrial and night schools.

Section A, Staff. Doubtless there are a few instances of overlapping of educational staff figures with those of evangelistic staff (Table I). Wherever the distinction could be made entries recorded so indicate.

Sections C and D, Bible Training and Theological. A division of these two grades of schools has been attempted in this Survey. Owing to variant interpretations as to which are to be regarded as Theological Schools and which as Bible Training Schools it was impossible critically to classify these institutions. Entries as made by the societies reporting have been accepted and followed in each case.

Section E, Teacher Training. Teacher training schools are often conducted as parts of other schools. The returns have not made practicable all the divisions which undoubtedly would be desirable.

Section G, Medical Colleges. Medical training goes on in hospitals as well as in organized colleges. This is particularly true in Africa, where most of the medical teaching is done in this way. Only one or two societies at work in Africa have reported in such a way that their figures for students of medicine could be included.

Omission. After this table was in type and totals and summaries completed it was found that the entry for the American University at Cairo for teachers in Column 11 had been omitted. This item should read 26.

MEDICAL

EXPLANATORY NOTES

Foreign Staff. Figures for the medical foreign staff are reported in the last four columns on Table II.

Questionnaires. These statistics were based on questionnaires sent to all medical institutions on the field. Not all of the questionnaires were returned. The reports here given are incomplete to this extent except for such supplementary figures as have been discoverable in printed reports of the societies concerned. The questionnaire called for more detailed information than is here given. A summary of the complete returns will be prepared and made available to those particularly interested in medical work.

China and India. The securing of answers to the questionnaires was handled in China by Dr. James L. Maxwell of the Chinese Medical Association, and in India by Dr. B. Choné Oliver, of the national Christian Council of India. Their work was very efficiently done, and as a result of their efforts the reports for these two fields are gratifyingly complete.

Operations. Variations in reporting classification of operations have made a division into minor and major operations inadvisable.

Leper Work. Leper work is not reported separately except as the name of the institution may indicate that it is maintained for that purpose alone.

Use of Totals. Care should be taken in using the data in Columns 7, 8, 9 and 14. Many of the reports omitted replies to certain questions. This results in incomplete totals. That for "In-Patient Days" in relation to "Number of Beds" and "In-Patients" has been seriously affected in this way. This is also true of the column for "Total Treatments."

INTERPRETATIVE ARTICLES

KENNETH SCOTT LATOURETTE

One of the most striking features of the world-wide Christian movement of the past few years has been the deeper rooting of the faith on its geographic frontiers. Of this the most tangible and encouraging indication is the growth in maturity, size, and leadership of what are often called the younger or indigenous churches.

It is impossible fully to portray that growth by means of statistical tables. Much of it is in intangibles which escape the somewhat crude yardstick of figures. Such elements of primary importance as quality of life, moral and spiritual changes wrought in the millions of individuals who compose the churches, growth in the apprehension of the Christian gospel, and the effect upon the life of the communities in which the churches are set cannot be compressed into arithmetic tables. Sometimes they cannot be even hinted at by numbers.

Yet statistics have their place, and an important one. Seen in their true perspective, against a background of movements and conditions detected in non-numerical ways, they make an indispensable contribution to an understanding of the changing status of Christianity.

The tables in this volume, and especially those labeled "The Church on the Field," indicate that the younger churches: (1) while still depending heavily upon the older churches for assistance in finances and personnel, are advancing towards a position in the world-wide Christian fellowship of equality with the churches which have founded them; (2) that they are growing in numerical strength; (3) that they are rapidly being equipped with a trained leadership; and (4) that they are moving towards financial independence.

The past decade has, in general, been one of stationary or declining assistance of the younger by the older churches of the Protestant tradition. The incomes of many of the missionary societies of the Occident have seriously decreased. This is due in part to the reaction in the United States from the forced levels of giving just after the World War, in part to the world-wide financial depression, in part to the peculiar political and financial difficulties which have overtaken the churches of Germany, in part to doubts and questions which have beset Christians in an age in which historic foundations are being shaken or removed, and in part to a psychology of retreat born of the ebb of nineteenth century Western imperialism. Loss of income has made necessary the reduction of missionary contingents and of subsidies to the staffs of the younger churches.

Yet, in spite of the decrease in assistance in money and personnel from the older churches, the younger churches have continued to grow. Though many of them are weak and nearly all are still dependent upon some kind of help from the Occident, their growth in the face of declining assistance from the West is evidence of a vitality which augurs well for the future.

The movement towards the equality of the younger with the older churches is seen partly in the emergence of the younger churches to a distinct place in the statistical tables. As recently as in the World Missionary Atlas of 1925, issued at a time when much was beginning to be made of the "indigenization" of Christianity, the younger churches were listed even in Japan, the land where they had most nearly come to maturity, in a subordinate position and not as churches, but as "agencies." Under the tables for other countries they either were non-existent or were denominated "agencies" or "societies." In the present statistical tables they head the list as "churches." Directly under them are placed the Japan or China or India or other field societies, and last of all the Australian, British, Continental, and North American societies. This is not an editorial device forced on the compilers by a sensitive Oriental or African nationalism. It corresponds with facts. Only those bodies are classified as churches which can legitimately be called such. The younger churches are actually in existence. In some instances the status is obscured by the fact that the younger churches are part of a world-wide denominational fellowship, and statistical procedure within the denomination has made it impossible to distinguish the work of the younger churches from the older.

It must, on the other hand, be noted that the transition from mission to church is far from completed. Often the Christian communities here statistically described are so clearly in the transitional stage that the editors have found difficulty in determining whether to classify them under churches or under some missionary society. Many of them are grouped under both. In many lands nothing exists which can accurately be called a "younger church" as distinct from the foreign "mission."

That rapid progress is being made, however, in the maturity of the younger churches cannot be doubted. A comparison with the other statistical studies of Protestant missions which have appeared at intervals in the present century is convincing. It shows these bodies achieving a recognition which thirty-five and even twenty years ago was still, with a few notable exceptions, a dream of the future.

The continuing emergence of the younger churches is also seen in the numerical growth of the Christian communities in the lands to which Occidental missionaries go. If comparisons are made with earlier comprehensive statistical tables compiled in the present century, this increase is seen both in communicants and in the totals of baptized Christians. The thirteen years since the World Missionary Atlas of 1925 have, as we have suggested, been marked in many lands by stationary or declining foreign missionary staffs and by sharp retrenchments in financial assistance from the older churches. In country after country these years have been punctuated by major political disturbances. Yet almost everywhere they have witnessed marked growth in the younger churches. In some areas, so far as reported figures show, the growth in actual numbers has been more rapid than in the first two and a half decades of the present century. In most lands the percentage of growth has slightly slowed down. In a few lands, however, even this percentage has increased.

Here the tables of communicants are our most dependable guide, for those which embrace all the baptized Christians, including baptized non-communicants, are probably, for purposes of comparison, farther removed from accuracy.

In India the number of communicants has about trebled in the present century and has increased nearly fifty per cent. in the past twelve years. The number of baptized, including communicants and non-communicants, seems to have multiplied tenfold in the present century and more than doubled in the past twelve years. This growth reflects the enormous accessions from the outcastes through the mass movements of these years.

Africa south of the Sahara—Negro Africa—has also shown a prodigious growth. If our statistics are to be trusted, the number of communicants has multiplied fivefold in the present century and now stands at approximately two millions. It has more than doubled in the past thirteen years. The number of baptized, including non-communicants, has more than trebled in the present century and has more than doubled in the past thirteen years. It is now between three and a half and three and three quarters millions. Together with the corresponding remarkable growth of Roman Catholic Christianity, this increase in Negro African Protestant Christians is evidence of the rapid disintegration of the old Negro cultures which has been taking place during the present century and especially since the World War, and of the striking manner in which Christian missions are helping the Negro make a wholesome adjustment to the new day. About seven out of every hundred Negro Africans are now professing Christians, approximately half of these being Protestants and half Roman Catholics. The slowest growth on the African continent has been in South Africa, where more than a third of the Protestant Christians live and where the body of communicants has not quite doubled in the past thirteen years; in South-West Africa, where it has grown by only one half; and in Uganda, where it has about doubled. The most rapid rates of increase in the past thirteen years have been in the Rhodesias, Angola, and Kenya, where they have been between five- and eightfold (the highest is in Angola). Even in the Belgian Congo, where the Roman Catholic competition has often proved so annoying and where Roman Catholics outnumber Protestants about four to one, in the past twelve years Protestant communicants have multiplied over fourfold. In Tanganyika the increase has been fourfold.

In the Philippines the number of Protestant communicants has risen from practically nothing at the beginning of the century to over 190,000. In the past thirteen years it has about trebled, proportionately a more rapid increase than in the decade which embraced the World War. So too, in Latin America the growth has been phenomenal. There the number of communicants appears to have multiplied more than sevenfold in the present century and to have trebled in the past thirteen years. As in the Philippines, this recent growth has been more rapid than in the War decade. Proportionately as well as in gross numbers it has been more rapid than in the first two and a half decades of the present century. The largest body of communicants in any one Latin American republic is in Brazil. Here the total has more than trebled in the past thirteen years. Even in Mexico, where the political vicissitudes have proved so perplexing, the total is only slightly less than twice as large as thirteen years ago. It is interesting that in the past decade the largest proportional growth of Protestant bodies appears to have been in regions which are usually thought of as Roman Catholic—and that in a day in which, the world around, Roman Catholic missions are displaying unusual vigor.

In Japan the number of communicants has multiplied nearly fivefold in the present century and has increased by about fifty per cent., to a total of over two hundred thousand, in the present decade. The recent growth has been in spite of the rising nationalism which looks askance at Christianity because of the latter's supra-national nature and is due in part to the remarkable evangelistic campaign of the past few years. Proportionately, however, the increase has not been so rapid as in the earlier years of the present century.

In Korea the number of communicants has multiplied nearly seventyfold in the present century. The great increase was made in the first decade and a half. In the last thirteen years the gain has been only about thirty-five per cent.

In China as in Japan the number of communicants has multiplied about fivefold in the present century. As in Japan, moreover, the rate of growth has slowed down in the past thirteen years. In this period has come much of the virulent anti-Christian movement which for a time seemed to threaten ruin to the Protestant Christian enterprise. In spite of that severe testing, the Protestant Christian communities in the area which in 1925 was China have increased by about forty per cent.—an amazing achievement.

In the Netherlands East Indies more baptized Christians are to be found than in all the rest of the Far East. Here, too, the present century has witnessed a remarkable growth.

In Burma the number of communicants seems to have risen by about seventy-five per cent. in the past thirteen years. The same is true of the Protestant communicants in Egypt.

In Iran the Protestant churches have experienced a rapid recovery from the disasters of the World War. The catastrophes of those tragic years reduced their numerical strength to about a fourth of what it had been—and that was never very large. Of late years numerically the Protestant groups have come back to within a few hundred of their pre-War size. The new adherents, significantly, have come in an encouraging, although still slight number from Islam.

Throughout the Near East, except Egypt, disasters of the World War and its aftermath of massacres and famines brought the greatest disruption which Protestant missions have suffered anywhere in the world in the present century. Recovery from that series of disasters has not yet been fully accomplished.

In Madagascar, where the last century witnessed some of the most spectacular achievements of Protestant missions and where in the first quarter of the present century the Protestant communicants more than doubled in numbers, the past thirteen years seem to have seen a decrease of about ten per cent. as contrasted with a growth in the total of Roman Catholics.

In the light of this record the observation is worth repeating that it is little short of astonishing that in the face of the turmoil of the past twenty-five and especially of the past ten years, with the exception of such a few regions, the Christian communities established by Protestant missions have shown so marked a growth.

The statistics seem to show that the individual local churches are, on the average, increasing in size. In almost every major region the proportionate growth of the number of communicants is greater than that of the organized local churches and of places where regular services are being held. Yet it is true that the numbers of both organized churches and of places where organized services are being held have increased through the century, including the past thirteen years. This also seems to be a sign of vigor. The increase in the average size of groups of believers appears to indicate that the organized local churches are continuing to flourish: the faith is growing not only by geographic extension but also by strengthening its hold upon the communities where it has already been established. Moreover, the sharp curtailment of assistance in finances and personnel from the older churches has not stopped the advance into communities where the faith has previously not been represented. That, at least, seems to be the significance of the increase in the number of centers where, apart from organized churches, regular services are being held. Of the major areas, only in India and the Philippines does there seem to have been a decrease in this category. Here the decline in the past thirteen years has been slightly more than fifty per cent. In both of these countries, on the other hand, the number of organized churches has markedly increased—about in the same proportion as in most other major areas.

In the tables of salaried church-workers two opposite tendencies are seen. The first is a sharp decrease in the numbers of women and unordained men. Only in Latin America, Madagascar, and Negro Africa have the past thirteen years shown an increase, and only in Latin America has it been considerable. The other is a marked increase in the number of ordained men. The first appears to be chiefly a consequence of the decreasing financial subsidies from the older churches. Hundreds of Bible women and the more poorly trained men, colporteurs, evangelists, and catechists have been cut off the payrolls of the missions and of the churches aided by foreign funds. Missions and younger churches are feeling their way toward more unpaid, voluntary assistance. On the other hand, the increase in the ordained staff appears to indicate an increase in the quality of leadership. Presumably ordination presupposes better training than is afforded by Bible women and unordained colporteurs, catechists, and evangelists. The amount of professional training possessed by the leaders of the younger churches is, then, rising. The increase in the number of ordained men has more than kept pace with that in organized churches. In none of the lands does the number of clergy equal the number of churches, so that in no major region does the supply seem to exceed the need. To be sure, in quality the training of a very large proportion, probably the great majority of the clergy leaves much to be desired. In some lands the training and the number of the clergy are far better than in others. For instance, in proportion to the number of Christians Japan is much better supplied with ordained clergy than is China, India, or Negro Africa. Perhaps that is because in Japan the younger churches are so far on the road to independence of the churches of the Occident.

Whether in the subsequent decade the decline in the staffs of women and unordained men will be followed by a similar decline in the rate of accessions, we do not yet know. For the moment it is not demonstrated to have operated in that direction.

Material for the financial yardstick is rather more difficult to gather and to put on a comparable chronological basis than is that for some of the other categories. Here, however, so far as our tables enable us to determine the facts, the record is encouraging. As we have repeatedly had occasion to remind ourselves, the past decade has witnessed a sharp decrease in the total giving to foreign mission societies and so in the financial aid given by the older to the younger churches. The depression which is in part responsible for that decrease has been world-wide. It has affected the members of the younger as well as the members of the older churches. Yet so far as the figures enable us to determine the facts, in most of the major areas the younger churches have shown an increase in the total gifts of their constituencies. In not all countries has this increase been proportionately as great as has that in communicant membership. In some areas the average per capita giving of the younger churches has actually declined. That seems to be true in lands as different as Japan, China, the Philippines, and Negro Africa. Yet in at least three countries, Korea, India, and Egypt, the per capita giving seems to have increased, and that in the face of the abject poverty of great masses of the membership. In the light of the world-wide depression, the record is heartening.

In the main, then, the figures seem to show a rapid and healthy growth of the younger churches. In a day when Christianity is being tested as it has not been for over a century and when chaos, international and within many lands, is increasing, the younger members of the world-wide Christian fellowship have been increasing in numerical strength, in leadership, and in self-reliance.

Yet this encouraging progress must not blind us to another side of the picture. In proportion to the populations in which they are set, the younger churches are still pitifully small minorities. In some areas they are almost or entirely non-existent. Marked as has been their advance towards "self-government, self-support, and self-propagation," they are still dependent on the churches of the Occident. They are submerged in a world which, on the whole, is increasingly hostile to the Christian message. Some of their members are proving of great assistance to the older churches. The flow of missionaries is from younger to older, as well as from older to younger, churches. For at least a generation to come, however, the flow must continue to be primarily in the latter direction.

The 1938 statistics to which this article refers are to be found in Table I on pages 48-82.

MISSIONARY AND NATIONAL PERSONNEL

CHARLES H. FAHS

According to the new statistics missionaries—men and women, ordained and lay, doctors and teachers, married and unmarried—now number 27,483, for Asia, Africa, Latin America, and the Island World, as compared with 28,010 in 1925, a drop of 527 since the statistics of the World Missionary Atlas were gathered.¹ This decrease appears surprisingly small in view of the long-continued depression in so-called home-base lands and of the marked drop in incomes experienced by many boards. The number of foreign missionaries in Asia (including Turkey-in-Europe) decreased by 2,345, or from 16,663 to 14,318, during the period of thirteen years. Australasia, Netherlands Indies, and Oceania together have decreased by 43, or from 1,810 to 1,767, indicating no significant change in number for this general area. Missionaries in Latin America together with all the West Indies have decreased from 3,249 to 2,951 or by 298. Africa, on the other hand, shows the extraordinary increase in foreign staff from 6,289 to 8,447, or a gain of 2,158.

In spite of the drop in total foreign staff, ordained missionaries have more than held their own, and in fact number 7,518 in 1938 as compared with 7,277 in 1925. In per cent. of the total, ordained missionaries now comprise 27.35 per cent. as compared with 24.55 per cent. thirteen years ago. Men not ordained now number 3,427 as compared with 3,710 in 1925, a drop of 283. Short-term workers of both sexes number 310 as compared with 382 in 1925—no hint here of any departure from full life service as the normal expectation in foreign appointments. Men doctors among the foreign staff have dropped in number from 791 to 619 since 1925; women doctors from 353 to 291; but foreign nurses have increased from 987 to 1,232, indicating a marked development in emphasis on the field of nursing and nurses' training. There is for 1938 a new column providing for 261 unclassified foreign workers in medicine, presumably for the most part technicians in the larger hospitals. These figures for foreign staff at work in the medical arm of the foreign missionary enterprise should be compared with the statistics for national medical workers, considered below.

The tables for 1925 and 1938 both give the numbers for ordained men missionaries, for men not ordained, for wives, and for unmarried women and widows. Presumably the number of husbands is to be equated with that of wives, so by subtraction we can find a basis for comparing the number of unmarried men and widowers with that of the unmarried women and widows. The two figures for 1925 are 2,627 and 8,663, or for the first 9½ per cent. of the total number of all missionaries and for the second 31½ per cent. For 1938, the short-term workers (310) are reported separately but not by sex and family status whereas in 1925 these were reported separately but were also distributed by sex and marital condition under other rubrics. Consequently, completely accurate comparisons of the respective type groups for the two periods is not possible, but in any case the short-term workers comprise only a little over one per cent. of the total missionary staff. Subtracting the short-termers from the grand total for 1938, we have 27,173 missionaries whose status is given. Of this total 3,576 are unmarried men or widowers and 8,859 are single women or widows. With a decrease from 1925 to 1938 of 527 in the total number of missionaries (but a decrease of 837 in the figure used for percentages, i.e., 527 plus 310) the unmarried men and widowers have increased by 949, or more than one third, and they now comprise 13 per cent. of the total foreign staff. The unmarried women and widows have increased by 196, but their percentage of the total missionary group has gone up from 31.5 per cent. to 32.2 per cent. With a falling total missionary body there clearly has been a marked shift in the relative strength of the non-family group. The missionary agencies for some reason, perhaps because of the financial situation, are leaning more heavily on the unmarried staff to carry on the missionary task, and in proportion the number of unmarried men is increasing more rapidly than is that of the unmarried women. If the present trend continues, not long hence a full half of the missionary personnel will be unmarried, and of this half one third will be unmarried men.

Residence stations in Asia and in the Pacific area have decreased in number (in the latter area by 202), and in Latin America the number of stations has increased very slightly, while in Africa there is an increase of 312 residence centers. The figures are subject to correction by elimination of duplicates—Tokyo or Buenos Aires, for instance, to be counted as one station only, rather than as a station for every agency reported as having missionaries resident therein—but the high probability is that in Africa the new stations would provide few duplicates so to be eliminated. There would appear to be a markedly greater spread of missionaries in that continent than for the years earlier reported on in broad statistical studies.

The total salaried staff of nationals, both men and women, connected with the missions and churches in the fields of missionary concern increased by a third from 1925 to 1938, or from 150,673 to 203,468. All the major areas show marked increases, but as in the case of foreign missionaries, Africa shows the greatest relative increase (84 per cent.) as compared, say, with that of Asia (9 1/3 per cent.). But whereas both Africa and Asia have exhibited a fairly steady increase in national staff throughout the nineteenth century thus far, as shown by the four major statistical studies of the period, an extraordinary situation in Latin America (with all the West Indies) is to be noted. For this area the national staff total for 1903 was 6,000; for 1911, it was 6,199; for 1925, 6,094; but for 1938 it is shown to be 10,132. The near-paralysis in respect to providing national leaders, a condition which seemed to exist in this region for several decades, now appears to have passed, and with a slowly dropping foreign personnel, the load is being taken over by a rapidly increasing staff of nationals.

Ordained nationals have reached their new figure of 17,789 at a rate of net growth from 1925 (when the figure was 10,134) of 588 men a year, whereas the net annual growth in ordained nationals from the time of the Edinburgh Conference of 1910 to the period of the World Missionary Atlas of 1925, was 372. There were 5,937 ordained missionaries and 5,586 ordained nationals reported in the 1911 Atlas; 7,277 ordained missionaries and 10,134 ordained nationals in 1925; and 7,518 ordained missionaries and 17,789 ordained nationals in 1938. At the time of the Edinburgh Conference ordained missionaries exceeded ordained nationals by 351. Now the ordained nationals exceed the ordained missionaries by more than 10,000.

The new statistics provide an additional measure of differentiation for national staff figures, dividing between evangelistic and educational personnel. In the evangelistic field there are now 65,166 men not ordained and 14,045 women, a total of 79,211. In education there are now 81,862 men and 19,024 women, a total of 100,886. The medical staff of nationals, who are not included under evangelistic or educational work, makes up the remainder of the grand total of 203,468, already noted.

In 1925, men in the paid service of churches and missions but not ordained numbered 108,271. The new statistics make possible a presumably comparable figure of 146,989, if we combine the appropriate item for the evangelistic group, regard those in the educational services as not ordained, and omit the medical staff of nationals. Thus it would seem that there has been a growth in salaried staff of men not ordained of nearly 36 per cent. A similar handling of the statistics for women nationals on the staffs of missions and churches in 1925 and 1938 show respective totals of 30,121 and 32,981, a growth of only 9 per cent.

If the figures for ordained men for both dates were included in the calculation the difference in the trends for men and for women in salaried service would be even more marked. As the younger churches develop, these churches appear to offer no great hope that women will find in them an ever enlarging place for professional service; that is, certainly not as compared with the opportunities offered to men. The statistics of 1925 do not provide a basis for discerning the trend in this respect in education as compared with that in evangelistic work. The field of nursing will be touched upon later.

In considering the national staff at work in the medical arm of the service it is of interest that men doctors have almost doubled in number from 1925 to 1938, that is, from 513 to 1,016, while women doctors have increased from 99 to 330, or more than trebled. Perspective at this point is especially valuable. Professor Beach in 1903 in the Geography and Atlas of Protestant Missions did not find occasion to report on the emergence of a staff of nationals serving as doctors, and in 1911 the World Atlas of Christian Missions reported only the registrants in medical schools and classes. Now in 1938 doctors from the soil but Western trained, or trained in Western techniques, are serving mission hospitals to the number of 1,346 men and women as compared with 910 men and women physicians from the West. Moreover, the 1,232 nurses from the West are sharing their beneficent ministry with 4,175 nurses who are nationals, and with 8,906 student nurses in training, yet only so long ago as 1925 both men and women nationals in hospitals appeared in the statistics simply as "trained hospital assistants." The profession of nursing for nationals was finding its way in many fields but these women still waited for recognition as regards both status and standards.

Such appear to be the more important implications of the new personnel figures so far as the grand totals, or the totals by major divisions, can take us. If for each country the statistics by periods were painstakingly challenged to show their meanings through similar comparisons doubtless much of additional interest would be discovered. Reporting on such a process, however, would call for space far beyond that allocated to this interpretative article. Only glimpses can be offered here, the statistics of 1925 and those of 1938 being utilized to provide contrasts which indicate tendencies.

The missionary body in Japan has dropped from 1,253 to 829 while ordained Japanese have increased from 950 to 1,759. Men not ordained who are serving churches and schools have increased markedly (from 1,358 to 3,327), while women nationals, all services except medicine, remain practically unchanged in number (1,227 and 1,240).

Missionaries in Korea have decreased by 136 (598 to 462); ordained Koreans are up from 566 to 1,050; Korean doctors, men and women, are up from 10 to 89, with 124 qualified nurses now on the lists.

Total missionaries in China (including Manchuria) are down from 7,663 to 6,020; ordained Chinese up from 1,966 to 2,196—a surprisingly small advance for thirteen years. Chinese staff women, in services other than medicine, are down from 6,846 to 5,967. Chinese doctors, men and women, are up from 373 to 662—a greater increase in the number of doctors, men and women, than in that of ordained men. Chinese nurses serving through the churches and missions number 1,698, while 4,110 student nurses are in training. There are almost as many nurses or nurses in training as there are women serving both churches and schools.

Formosa missionaries, having increased by one, now number 42. Ordained nationals have dropped from 25 to 12; unordained men in churches and schools from 147 to 81, and no women appear in the

Formosa church staff entries, although there are 20 in educational work and three qualified nurses,—together just half the total number of women reported in 1925. (See remark under Ceylon below.)

In French Indo-China missionaries have nearly doubled in number (from 33 to 64), and an entry shows 30 ordained nationals whereas in 1925 none was reported.

India, apart from Burma, has had a drop in total missionaries from 5,326 to 5,114,¹ but an increase in unmarried women from 2,125 to 2,191. Ordained Indians have increased from 1,879 to 2,440 and men not ordained serving churches and schools from 29,820 to 31,850. Indian women on the staff of church and school have decreased from 13,749 to 12,488. Indian doctors, men and women, have increased from 145 to 346, and there are now 723 Indian nurses with 1,652 in training.

Ceylon has decreased in total missionary staff from 229 in 1925 to 163 in 1938; in ordained nationals from 151 to 82; while in men not ordained there is an increase from 1,552 to 2,483; in women nationals there is a decrease from 1,373 to 809. The question arises as to what is happening in Ceylon, for ordained men (missionaries and nationals together) have dropped from 211 to 162, women in church and school have markedly decreased in number, while unordained men now in education alone (2,165) are greatly in excess of the total unordained men in 1925 (1,552) who were serving in church or school.

Iran (Persia) has increased in missionary staff (164 to 189) and in ordained nationals (6 to 10). Men nationals not ordained but serving the churches together with those in educational work have increased in number (104 to 150), while women nationals on the staffs have decreased (106 to 79).

Iraq has now more than twice as many missionaries as in 1925 (then 9, now 22), and reports 4 ordained men.

Arabia's missionaries have increased from 29 to 56,¹ but Turkey's total missionary staff is down from 265 to 95.

Syria and Palestine (with Trans-Jordan) show startling changes. The missionary group in the former has grown from 218 to 354¹ and in the latter from 160 to 275. Reasons for such increases in these two relatively small areas in view of the tragic and urgent conditions elsewhere would be interesting to discover but perhaps hard to justify.

The Philippines show an increase in missionaries from 287 to 295, in ordained men from 171 to 472. In the number of staff women there is an increase from 321 to 823, the women now exceeding in number the men not ordained who are down from 1,505 to 791.

The islands of the Netherlands Indies have dropped in number of missionaries from 693 to 564, but ordained men have increased more than tenfold (from 55 to 607). Men not ordained have decreased in number from 5,222 to 3,758, but staff women have increased from 30 to 110.

In Melanesia missionaries have increased from 392 to 526, ordained men from 209 to 259, and staff women, unreported in 1925, now number 76. In Micronesia missionaries have increased from 22 to 33, and ordained men have doubled in number (34 to 70). In Polynesia missionaries have increased from 85 to 123 and ordained men from 286 to 522. In the Hawaiian Islands missionaries have dropped almost fifty per cent. in number (142 to 74), while ordained men have just doubled (62 and 124).

An especially interesting fact is the increase of ordained men from 3 to 13 among the Aborigines of Australia.

Striking increases in missionary staff in Africa are to be noted in French Sudan (14 to 93), Ivory Coast (39, with none reported in 1925), Gold Coast (81 to 137), Nigeria (464 to 834), Cameroun (110 to 161), French Equatorial Africa (104 to 186), Belgian Congo (653 to 1,079), Angola (186 to 219), Northern Rhodesia (194 to 247), Portuguese East Africa (109 to 143), Nyasaland (245 to 287), Tanganyika Territory (176 to 509), Kenya Colony (252 to 288), Uganda (112 to 155).

Ethiopia, under conditions existing before the Italian invasion, shows an increase of 81 missionaries (34 to 115), while the missions in Eritrea, already under Italian pressure before the Ethiopian drive, show a decrease of 22 (39 to 17).

Marked development to be noted in the staffs of ordained Africans are as follows: Gold Coast (97 to 165), Cameroun (11 to 42), French Equatorial Africa (2 to 180), Belgian Congo (5 to 336), Angola (21 to 46), South-West Africa (none to 26), South Africa (513 to 2,489), Southern Rhodesia (20 to 84), Nyasaland (17 to 78), Tanganyika Territory (22 to 114), Kenya Colony (16 to 73), Eritrea (10 to 24), Madagascar (711 to 959).

In Latin America considerable increases in missionary staff are found in Colombia (40 to 120), Peru (114 to 190), Bolivia (118 to 154), Brazil (513 to 561). Significant decreases are in Dutch Guiana (102 to 40), Chile (182 to 113), Paraguay (50 to 43), Uruguay (71 to 28), and Mexico (280 to 205). Increases of especial note in the number of ordained nationals are in Mexico (133 to 258), Argentina (53 to 112), Bolivia (none to 6), Brazil (242 to 653), Chile (51 to 348), Peru (8 to 19). In 1925 for all of Latin America and the West Indies 1,257 staff women were reported; in 1938, 2,205 women are indicated as in paid service in churches and schools for this general area.

The statistics for 1925 do not indicate totals of foreign staff for each of the respective supporting boards and societies, nor such totals for each of the supporting lands. A first approach to such a presentation is offered by the new statistics, but no comparisons are practicable in this connection. It would indeed be interesting to discover which sending countries have increased and which have decreased the numbers of missionaries supported, which particular boards and societies have advanced in the number of foreign missionary personnel maintained, and which have shortened their lists; also whether distinct groupings of boards and societies, or of agencies other than those of the organized churches, are discoverable in this connection, and what might be the particular significance of advances or retreats in the numbers of missionaries supported through one or another of these groups of organizations. Only by going to original sources for 1925 or by completely reorganizing the foreign staff tables in the World Missionary Atlas and the striking of new totals could this be ascertained, and a satisfactory basis for comparison be provided.

The 1938 statistics to which this article refers are to be found in Table I, pp. 48-82; Table II, pp. 84-121; Table IV, pp. 162-192; Table V, pp. 214-230.

ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION

EDWARD WILSON WALLACE

Educational statistics in the world missionary at-lases from 1903 to 1938 reflect certain far-reaching developments in education throughout the world during that period. Education of the Western type has spread throughout almost the whole world and is everywhere displacing the older systems. There is an increasing acceptance of the idea that all children should be given school education, either in publicly provided schools or in private schools under public supervision. In a number of countries there has grown distrust of educational institutions under "foreign" control, and various attempts, more or less successful, have been made to bring mission schools and colleges under a measure of control by public educational authorities.

In 1903, Western education was largely confined to Europe, North and South America, South Africa, Australia, and New Zealand. In almost all mission fields Christian schools were still the pioneers of Western education, and often its only examples. Noteworthy exceptions were India, where for almost a century a number of schools and colleges providing an English type of education had been supported by the government, and Japan, which in 1899 had adopted a complete system of education on the Western model. Elsewhere, age-old educational systems seemed firmly entrenched, or, as in many parts of Africa, formal school education was almost entirely lacking except for the mission schools. In most of the mission fields education was still a matter for private initiative. State control was rarely exercised over mission schools, except in Japan.

Between 1911 and 1925, the older types of education were rapidly giving place to Western education in most of the countries where Christian missions were at work. Naturally, at first, great difficulty was experienced by educational authorities in providing the necessary number of new schools and in training teachers of the new type. The Christian schools with their missionary teachers were already on the ground and for a time these schools were crowded with pupils. The tide in their favor was still running high in 1925.

During the past thirteen years, however, the rise of national consciousness throughout the world and the recognition of the paramount importance of education in maintaining and developing national cultures have made governments increasingly desirous of extending and controlling the facilities for the training of their future citizens. There are now, in 1938, few parts of the world where the Western type of education has not replaced the older systems, in law if not always in actual practice. The ideal of universal education, for boys and girls alike, in the elementary grade has been widely adopted, although it is becoming effective only slowly.

Many governments are sensitive to the presence of schools under foreign control, and mission schools have sometimes been under the suspicion of exercising upon their pupils an undesirable "foreign-izing" influence. In Turkey and in Mexico these schools have been closed by government regulation. Elsewhere, in Japan, in India, and in many parts of Africa, for example, their position has been recognized within the public system of education as private schools. This recognition, in some cases, has involved restriction upon the religious activities of the schools. The adoption of government curricula and standards in school buildings, equipment, and teacher-training, and the opening of mission schools to inspection by government supervisors, are changing the character of the education that is given. In certain cases, particularly in China, control of the Christian schools has been largely transferred from missions to church bodies, which increasingly are under the control of nationals. The stigma of "foreign-ness" has thus been removed. This taking over by churches of educational institutions formerly controlled and still supported in some degree by missions is one of the significant developments in recent years. Its extent is only partially revealed in the statistics reported for schools maintained by the national churches, for many schools reported under missions are actually administered by church courts or educational committees.

If one could see side by side the schools of 1903 and those of 1938, the greatest contrast would be in the improvement in their educational efficiency. This improvement has been brought about not only through the requirements of public educational authorities, but also through recognition by missionary educators and mission bodies of the necessity, for the Christian effectiveness of the schools, that they provide a training which is at least equal to that of the best schools within the government system. During the past fifteen years, a number of special commissions of survey of mission education have made careful study by educational experts of the work done in mission schools.¹ To no small degree the recommendations of these commissions are being put into effect. In many of the larger mission fields, missions coöperate for the improvement of their educational institutions, either through a committee of the National Christian Council, or through an independent Christian Educational Association.

Of even greater importance to the life of the church is the increased attention that is being given to methods of religious education. This important subject was considered at the Jerusalem Meeting of the International Missionary Council in 1928, and Volume II of the report of that conference is still of value. Special committees and councils on religious education are found in connection with the work of several of the National Christian Councils.

These changes are not all directly revealed in the statistical tables, but they condition in greater or less degree what is being done in mission schools today.

The number of schools and pupils reported in all grades is most impressive: 55,972 schools and 3,198,374 pupils. Of these pupils approximately one third are girls. In the elementary grade there are 53,158 schools and 2,925,134 pupils; there are 891 kindergartens, with 41,430 pupils; and special schools number 705, with 32,496 pupils. These children are under Christian influence for the larger part of their time, for a number of the most formative years of their lives. The Christian opportunity thus afforded can scarcely be estimated.

ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS. The period of most rapid increase in this type of mission education was between 1911 and 1925, when, in the Orient, the demand for Western education became more insistent, but governments were not yet able fully to meet the demand. In the last thirteen years there has been a slowing up in the increase of schools and of pupils. The number of mission elementary schools has increased by only 9 per cent. and pupils by about 30 per cent.

¹ Surveys by special Educational Commissions are as follows: Village Education in India, (London: Oxford University Press, 1920); Christian Higher Education in India, (London: Oxford University Press, 1931); Christian Education in China, (New York: Stechert, 1922); Christian Education in Japan, (New York: International Missionary Council, 1932); Education in Africa: A Study of West, South, and Equatorial Africa, (New York: Phelps-Stokes Fund, 1922); Education in East Africa: A Study of East, Central, and South Africa, (New York: Phelps-Stokes Fund, 1925).

In Japan, where for many years the educational authorities have been remarkably successful in securing the attendance at school of all children between the ages of six and twelve, there have been no mission elementary schools for a number of years. In China the number of such schools has greatly decreased and there has been a decrease of 30 per cent. in the number of pupils. In some cases, the development of the public system of elementary schools has seemed to make mission schools unnecessary, and some missions have withdrawn from that field. In other cases, this withdrawal has been made necessary because of decrease in mission funds. In Turkey and in Mexico government regulations have obliged mission elementary schools to close.

In other parts of the world there have been notable increases. In Korea, while the number of schools remains the same, pupil attendance has grown from 41,367 to 80,080. In India the statistics do not reveal the fact of most significance, namely the great number of village schools for children brought into relation with the church through the mass movements. Of 609,821 elementary school pupils reported for India, more than half, 370,706, are found in the Madras Presidency and under missions and Indian churches that work chiefly in the mass movement areas. Very large increases are shown also under the Dutch and German missions in the Netherlands East Indies, where the number of pupils under Christian instruction has increased from 91,897 to 175,485.

Throughout the greater part of Africa, mission schools have until very recently given most of the education that was available. Within recent years certain European governments have become aware of their responsibility for making provision for the education of the people in their African colonies and in mandated areas. In general, these governments do not attempt to provide all the schools that are needed, but welcome the assistance of mission schools and other privately supported schools, and liberal grants are made to schools that meet the government standards. In the Belgian Congo, only Roman Catholic schools and those under the Belgian Protestant Missionary Society are thus recognized and supported by the government. In spite of this fact, the number of Protestant schools in that colony has increased over threefold since 1925, and the number of pupils from 72,680 to 302,219. In Australasia, also, mission schools are in general given governmental assistance.

Even more important than the increases in the amount of mission education and in the number of children availing themselves of it, is the improvement in its character. Teachers are better trained. Subject matter and methods are more carefully adapted to the needs of the children, especially those in rural areas. In India, for example, schools of the Moga type have increased in number. In parts of Africa, as a result of the reports of the two Phelps-Stokes Commissions, many of the missions are co-operating in maintaining higher standards in their village schools, particularly through the use of the so-called "Jeanes" visiting teachers.

HIGH AND MIDDLE SCHOOLS. "The middle schools are the very heart of the system of Christian education." (Christian Education in Japan, page 45.) Christian leaders in many countries, both missionaries and nationals, would confirm this judgment, seeing in these schools the most fruitful contribution Christian education can make both to the life of the church and to society in general. Emphasis on schools of this grade has steadily grown during the years since the Atlas of 1903 was published, but comparisons of actual figures are apt to be misleading because of differences in classification.

In the statistics reported in 1903, schools were classified as "Day Schools" and "Higher Institutions," and the latter undoubtedly included colleges, as well as boarding schools of what would now be considered higher elementary grade. In 1911, "Boarding and High Schools" still included, in some cases, higher elementary schools, and this is the probable explanation of the large number of schools reported, 1,714, with 166,447 pupils. Beginning with 1925 the classification "High and Middle Schools" has been used. Comparing 1938 with 1925, the number of schools has dropped from 1512 to 1218, while pupils have only slightly increased, from 188,952 to 199,314. These figures, however, omit a number of schools, especially those of the Church Missionary Society, which have not differentiated elementary and high schools, all of which are entered under "Elementary Schools." It can be safely assumed that the actual number of pupils of this grade is well above 200,000.

The increase in the number of pupils per school is notable: it was 54 in 1903, 98 in 1911, 125 in 1925, and 163 in 1938. In Korea the average is 285 per school. Schools are reported with as many as 1,200 pupils each. These large enrollments have been made necessary in part by government requirements, and in part by the necessity of financing the schools chiefly by student fees. In many countries, the majority of the pupils in these schools come from non-Christian homes, attracted by the character of the education offered. Many connect themselves with the church while still at school.

In India and Japan, where schools of this grade have been in operation for many years, there are marked reductions in both schools and pupils. In China, the number of schools is reduced by almost 40 per cent. since 1911, but attendance has more than doubled. This is due in the main to a more correct classification. The rise of union institutions, in which are united a number of smaller schools supported by different missions, is a feature of recent years. In Melanesia and Micronesia there has been marked growth. Unfortunately in Africa where some of the major societies do not report higher schools as separate from elementary schools, the figures cannot be compared with earlier reports. There are indications that the numbers of schools and pupils are considerably larger than at any former period. Large increases are reported in the Belgian Congo, Nigeria, and South Africa. In Latin America, the large growth in pupil attendance during the last thirteen years has occurred mainly in Brazil.

KINDERGARTENS. In most of the countries represented in this report, the public educational authorities are concentrating upon elementary and high schools, and few kindergartens are to be found. The field is open to missions and churches, and the American societies in particular have taken advantage of the opportunity. Their schools are found chiefly in Asia, and in particular in Japan, China, India, and Korea.

SPECIAL SCHOOLS. In this category are included industrial and agricultural schools, as well as some trade schools and night schools. The classification does not correspond with that in any of the earlier atlases, and comparisons are therefore impossible. Of the 705 schools and 32,496 pupils reported, 599 schools and 28,842 pupils are in Asia, almost half from Korea, with substantial numbers from India and China. These figures obviously do not give the complete picture of the amount of industrial and agricultural training that is being given, for certain high schools have special departments in these subjects, which enroll a considerable proportion of their pupils. This fact probably accounts for the comparatively small number of schools and pupils reported for Africa, where missions have for many years given attention to such "practical" training.

NATIONAL TEACHERS. These figures are reported for the first time and there is, therefore, no basis of comparison with earlier reports. They form a very imposing demonstration of one of the results of mission education in the past. Many, if not most, of these national teachers have been trained in elementary and secondary schools and teacher-training institutions under mission direction. The staff reported are 81,862 men and 19,024 women, a total of 100,886 national teachers. The greater number are in India (half of those reported for that country being in the Madras Presidency), Africa, and China, and these are the fields in which most attention has been paid by missions to the training of teachers.

It is evident that the Christian schools are being staffed and the character of Christian education is now being largely determined, not as formerly by missionary teachers, but by men and women who are nationals of the countries in which the schools are found. This is one of the most significant changes in missionary education in this century, and its bearing upon the development of indigenous Christianity cannot be overestimated.

CONCLUSION. There are already indications that the opportunity for Christian elementary education will decrease as the ideal of the universal education of all children in a uniform public system of schools is given practical effect. What has already happened in Japan, Turkey, and Mexico will, in time, doubtless come to pass in other countries. Under colonial conditions, as in Africa and Australasia, it is probable that Christian schools, with other private schools, will continue to be welcomed by government authorities and supported in part from public funds.

It will be long before governments are in a position to provide public secondary education for all children who desire or need it, and the example of Europe and America would suggest that there will always be a place given to private schools of this grade. It is at this period of a child's development that varieties in capacity and need must be taken into consideration in education, and a uniform system is to be deplored. Schools which emphasize character-training, particularly under the influence of religion, should always be welcome, and it is in this field that Christian education may find its permanent place. While it is possible that in the immediate future some governments will be unwilling to grant freedom to Christian schools, even if their "foreign" character is removed, recent experience gives ground for hope that such a condition will be only temporary.

The future well-being of the church throughout the world is closely bound up with the Christian education of its children. Where, for any reason, Christian schools can no longer be maintained with advantage, missions and church bodies will undoubtedly give more and more attention to the religious education of children and youths. There is good ground to expect, however, that Christian schools will be able to continue their valuable work for many years to come, especially if they are able to adapt themselves to the requirements of government educational systems, and are given sufficient freedom to enable them to exercise their special and supplementary functions.

THEOLOGICAL EDUCATION

LUTHER A. WEIGLE

Theological schools were begun in most mission lands in imitation of the training which the missionaries had themselves received in Europe or America. But now, almost everywhere, they are passing beyond this stage. The theological school has begun to emerge, in the lands of the younger churches, as an institution of professional education for the Christian ministry, separate from the college or university, but seeking to maintain similarly high academic standards. This is a result of the general movement toward the nationalization and secularization of education, which in many countries has made it difficult or impossible for even Christian colleges to teach the principles of the Christian faith with sufficient directness and adequacy to afford basic preparation for effective service in the Christian ministry. The theological school, which is usually not admitted by the government to registration as an educational institution, is thereby left free to develop its curriculum to meet the needs of the Christian churches for a ministry both consecrated and educated. It is free, moreover, to develop Christian scholarship, research, translation, and creative writing in the fields cognate to Christian theology and the work of the Christian Church.

Comparison of the figures for theological education here published with those contained in the missionary atlases of 1911 and 1925 is of little significance, for the earlier volumes did not separate figures for theological schools and Bible training schools. While the total number of institutions and of students has in general increased, it is impossible, on the basis of such a comparison alone, to tell whether the increase has been in the institutions of higher or lower grade. Fortunately, within the past few years studies have been made in several fields, which deal with qualitative standards as well as with numbers. The fact that the present survey makes a distinction which the previous atlases did not, is in itself evidence of a new attitude toward the education of candidates for the ordained ministry of the younger churches.

By lay service in the Christian Church, strictly speaking, is meant the avocational, unpaid service of men and women who support themselves by some other vocation, such as farming, business, teaching, or home-making, and who are not ordained by the church to the Christian ministry. By ministerial service is meant the vocational, full-time service of men or women who have been called and ordained by the church to the Christian ministry, and who are supported by the church, if necessary, in order that they may be free to devote their full time and energy to this service. Between lay service and ministerial service, as thus defined, is a broad area of service rendered by men and women of various types of ability and training, who are unordained but paid by the church or by an associated mission. The development of the younger churches in recent years has shown the need for each of these three classes of service, and has directed attention to the differentiated types of education and training which each demands.

The problems and trends of theological education in the lands of the younger churches are clearly set forth in certain field studies, as exemplified in China in the report entitled Education for Service in the Christian Church in China, published in 1935 by the National Committee for Christian Religious Education, Shanghai. This records a comprehensive study which included a year's survey by a travelling team of three men in 1934, six months of travel, conference, and institutional visitation by an American consultant in 1935, and finally a ten-day conference at Kuling of educators, theological professors, and church and mission administrators. This survey showed that, chiefly because of economic, social and political conditions, there had been little advance and some retrogression in theological education since the report of the Burton Commission in 1922. It listed, with full data concerning faculty, students, property, income and expenditure, 13 Class A schools (theological schools requiring graduation from a senior middle school as a condition of entrance) with an enrollment of 522 students; 14 Class B schools (theological schools requiring graduation from a junior middle school as a condition of entrance) with 346 students; 29 Class C schools (Bible training schools requiring less than junior middle school preparation) with enrollment of 1,478, of whom 1,183 were women; and 4 Class D schools (unregistered evangelistic primary and middle schools) with enrollment of 737.

The Kuling Conference classified theological schools as follows: (1) theological colleges (Class A above) requiring graduation from senior middle school for entrance and affording a four-year curriculum; (2) theological training schools (Class B above) requiring graduation from junior middle school for entrance and affording a three-year curriculum; (3) graduate schools of theology (two of Class A above) requiring graduation from college as a condition of entrance. It held that schools which require less than graduation from a junior middle school as a condition of entrance (Classes C and D above) are not equipped to prepare men for the Christian ministry, and should not be classed as theological schools. They may be known generally as Bible training schools, and are to be regarded as schools of adult Christian religious education or of training for Christian lay service.

The Conference recommended the continuance and adequate development in China of four union theological colleges, three union theological training schools, and two graduate schools of theology. It initiated a plan whereby the four union theological colleges, at Tsinan, Nanking, Canton, and Chengtu, may unite under a common name, The Nanking Theological Seminary, to conduct the work of theological education in the four centers, under the direction of a common Board of Managers representative of all the churches and missions now coöperating in these institutions and others which may duly be admitted to such coöperation. It outlined ways in which the denominational theological schools, while maintaining their distinct organization and complete autonomy, may coöperate with these union institutions. It proposed a China Association of Theological Seminaries, to include both union and denominational institutions upon a basis of equality; and this Association was organized on July 26, 1935, its purpose being stated as "to cultivate fellowship, mutual helpfulness and coöperation among all those engaged in preparing an educated ministry for the Christian church in China."

The study revealed the necessity, particularly in the villages, of more responsible and effective lay service; and showed how important it is that the minister in charge of a pastoral circuit of village churches should know how to discover, train and supervise volunteer lay workers. The National Committee for Christian Religious Education in the fall of 1935 launched a nation-wide program for the education of lay workers which was well under way and meeting with good success when interrupted by war in the summer of 1937.

The Commission on Christian Higher Education in India (1931) stated that "if one considers the state of theological education as a whole one is impressed by its elementary character, its denominational character, and its isolation from the general trend of academic education. To these statements there is one conspicuous exception, namely, the group of theological colleges affiliated with Serampore." The institutions concerned in one form or another with training for the ministry "range all the way from catechetical schools conducted by a single person for the training of evangelists, teachers and Bible women, to theological seminaries after the Western plan, teaching in English up to B.D. degree."

Theological education in Japan is described in the Fact-Finders Report, 1931, and in Christian Education in Japan, 1932; and these reports are reviewed in an excellent chapter in the Japan Christian Year Book for 1935. The 1932 Survey of Brazil, by Dr. Braga and Mr. Grubb, regards the training of Christian workers as "one of the most urgent and outstanding problems," and adds that "the present situation is far from satisfactory." The Survey of the River Plate Republics by Dr. Browning states that the preparation of an efficient national ministry is "the greatest problem before the evangelical forces today."

Generally speaking trends which are manifest to a greater or lesser degree throughout the world fellowship of churches are:

(1) Recognition of the necessity of an educated ministry. This is not only for the sake of the church's appeal to the more intelligent population. It is also because the problems involved in the training and supervision of lay workers in the village churches demand a high grade of ability and education on the part of the pastor in charge of a rural circuit. The rapid development of governmental policies for training for leadership and service in various aspects of national life, such as education, public health, and rural reconstruction, confronts the church with a new challenge to make its ministry competent.

(2) Recognition that this challenge can be met only by the development of strong union institutions for theological education, or by coöperation on the part of denominational institutions.

(3) Recognition of the fact that the theological curriculum must not only equip the minister to understand, interpret, and teach the Word of God, and afford him adequate knowledge of the history of the Christian Church, the truths of the Christian faith, and the principles of the Christian life, but it must help him to understand the culture, heritage, and social conditions of his own country and time, and fit him to deal intelligently with other religions and with the strange ideologies current in the world today.

(4) A growing emphasis upon the importance of rural life and the training of the Christian ministry for rural churches.

(5) A growing recognition of the principle that the curriculum of theological education should make provision for training through practice under supervision.

(6) A new emphasis upon the importance of theological education in the vernacular and upon the need for a more adequate vernacular literature.

(7) A realization on the part of the theological seminaries of the necessity for more research, experiment, productive scholarship, and creative thinking and writing in the various fields related to Christian theology and the life of the churches.

The 1938 statistics to which this article refers are to be found in Table IV on pages 195-203.

HIGHER EDUCATION

FRANCIS C. M. WEI

No one who has any acquaintance with the Christian movement in the various lands in which the younger churches are now found will ever doubt the value and significance of Christian higher education. Through the Christian colleges and universities, theological seminaries and other professional schools, leaders are trained by the church and are going out every year imbued with the Christian spirit and are instrumental, directly or indirectly in spreading the ideals of Christian life throughout the several countries. Ministers, doctors, and teachers are needed by the growing churches. Social workers with a Christian motive, journalists with a Christian standard, and writers with a Christian vision can do wonders and the church must have a share in getting them trained. We desire to see Christian principles applied in business, industry, and politics. Let there be then institutions in which economics, history, and political science are approached from the Christian point of view. Does the modern world suspect that Christianity and science can ever keep house together? Let the Christian Church take a real interest in scientific investigations and encourage her promising young men and women to apply themselves earnestly to the pursuit of the various sciences.

How seriously have the younger churches been doing these things with the assistance of the older churches? Has work along these lines been developing or retrogressing during the last period of thirteen years? A statistical picture ought to answer questions like these. But owing to the difficulty of getting prompt and accurate reports for the various mission organizations concerned such a picture cannot be easily produced. The examination of these statistical tables, which are only a compilation of reports published by the churches and missions, reveals the incompleteness of these published reports, and it emphasizes the need for a more continuous and more accurate statistical enquiry.

COLLEGES. The tables for "Colleges" in the statistics for 1938 give 21 colleges in Japan, 2 in Korea, and 14 in China. Comparing these figures with the corresponding ones in the 1925 tables one may get the impression that in the case of Japan the colleges have increased in thirteen years from 12 to 21 and in the case of China they have decreased from 24 to 14. Upon enquiry, however, one finds that in 1938 the mission boards working in Japan simply turned in fuller reports and the figure 21 represents no increase in the actual number of institutions at all. The case of China is peculiar. Not only have several colleges in the country become amalgamated during the period 1925 to 1938, but in the 1925 tables one mission reported 2 institutions which were institutions already listed in the same tables and in which that particular mission was only participating. Owing to difficulties like these, a comparative study of the 1925 tables and the 1938 tables would throw little light on the actual shift in the situation in Christian higher education in the various lands.

In a comparison of any statistical tables discrepancies are bound to appear because of differences in definition. In the case of these tables when board reports were accepted without independent definition, difficulties arise when comparisons are made with independent commission studies in which definitions are highly selective. For example, these 1938 tables show 31 institutions under colleges in India and 1 under Burma. The Commission on Christian Higher Education in India under the chairmanship of Dr. A. D. Lindsay lists 38 institutions in its report of 1931, entitled The Christian College in India. There can of course be no attempt in the statistical tables themselves to explain such discrepancies which result from differing definitions. Another difficulty is the enforced dependence on published reports for sources of information. For example, these 1938 tables give 21 colleges for Japan. But Christian Education in Japan published in 1932 mentions 2 Christian universities, 8 colleges for men and 23 for women. Upon enquiry we find that some mission boards failed to report any of their colleges in Japan for the 1938 survey.

The figures for the colleges in China in the 1938 tables also need interpreting. The College of Chinese Studies, for example, has been listed as one of the colleges. It is usually thought of under an entirely different category from the other thirteen which are for the education of Chinese while this is a college for foreigners engaged in Chinese studies. As practices vary in different countries, there is no uniformity in the tables of theological seminaries. In the Philippines, because a seminary includes also general educational courses, it is listed under colleges, but in the China tables the seminaries are listed separately.

If time and space had permitted and reports had given the desired information, subdivision into more detailed categories would have been helpful. For example, the 1938 tables have this entry: Evangelical and Reformed Church, Board of Foreign Missions, 2 Institutions, 494 Total Students, 376 Men, 118 Women. The reader may ask: Is there one institution for men with 376 students and another for women with 118 students? Or, are both institutions co-educational? If so, how many men and how many women in each? Co-education is growing in institutions of higher learning in Japan nowadays, and it would be very helpful to know whether these institutions in question are co-educational or not.

Nine mission boards are listed as having colleges in Japan and only four in China. Other boards, not so listed, are interested in other institutions of higher education in those two countries through participation in the union colleges. Change in form of listing may be confusing unless attention is given to the notes.

The names of only the union colleges are mentioned while the names of the denominational colleges in some cases are omitted. It would have been helpful to have the latter also listed by name if space had permitted.

Of course, a curious reader may raise a hundred and one questions about the Christian colleges in the various lands. What is the average size of the faculty? What departments are there in the colleges? What is the cost of Christian higher education in the various lands or areas? What per cent. of the student body is Christian in an average college? None of these points is touched in the tables. The limitations enforced upon a world survey including all types of work make it inevitable that no single table can be exhaustive. Such enquirers must be referred to the more complete studies of special commissions, for such questions as these are not answered by the usual statistical reports upon which this Survey is based.

It is significant that out of the 110 institutions of Christian higher education in all the areas 69 are to be found in China, India, and Japan. Not only in population but also in their influence upon future developments of the world these three countries are of great importance. One question one would certainly ask is whether in such countries as China and Japan the policy is wise to try to maintain so many institutions instead of having fewer of them but stronger ones. "Quality is more important than quantity," to quote from Christian Education in Japan, "and . . . the essential thing is to strengthen the present institutions and make them schools of commanding influence" (p. 68). This applies not only to Japan but also to other countries like China and India.

The figures show clearly the important place of Christian higher education in the education program in China and Japan. The total number of students in all the universities, colleges, and professional schools in China is about 40,000, of whom 5,858 are in the Christian institutions. To educate one out of every seven future leaders of the Chinese people is certainly a rare privilege and a heavy responsibility. Christian Education in Japan gives 20,000 men in 7 Imperial universities, 4,000 in special colleges and 38,000 in the 24 private institutions of university grade, making a total of 62,000 students. The 1938 statistical tables give 8,427 as the grand total enrollment in 21 Christian colleges. This is again approximately one seventh of the students in all institutions of higher learning in Japan.

Taking the tables of 1925 and of 1938 as they are we note a remarkable increase in the number of women students in China, India, and Japan. The figures for 1925 are 290, 354, and 882 respectively and those have increased in thirteen years to 1,456, 967 and 1,528. In comparing the figures for Japan, however, we must not forget that for 1925 the tables give 12 institutions whereas for 1938 the number of institutions is 21. As we have already pointed out, there is no indication in either case as to how many of the institutions are for women only and how many are co-educational. It is quite possible that the difference between 21 and 12 represents in the later year largely institutions for women not listed in the earlier year. In the case of China, however, the increase is a real gain.

TEACHER TRAINING SCHOOLS. Teacher training schools are in a separate section of the educational tables and not a part of the college section under consideration above. We assume that students coming to these training schools must have had some kind of preliminary education. How much preliminary education is required, whether these are different grades of training schools, and how long the course at each grade is, are questions the statistical tables cannot attempt to answer in so limited a space. This being the case, it is of little use to ascertain from the tables on teacher training and the tables on general education whether the number of students being trained in any given area is adequate or not.

The reader will certainly be struck by the comparatively large number of schools for teacher training and the small size of the student body in most of the schools. Out of 260 such schools listed in the tables of 1938 at most 70 have enrollments over 100. At least 91 of them have enrollments of less than 50. It is difficult to aim at accuracy in making these estimates, because very often an entry includes more than one school and the total enrollment of these schools is given instead of the enrollment of each separate institution.

More missionary boards and societies are interested in teacher training than in higher education. But it is interesting to note that proportionally there are fewer training schools in China than in India and fewer in Japan than in China, there being only 5 in Japan against 36 in China and 63 in India. The development of nationalism, and government control of primary education in the country seem to be influential factors in determining this.

The 1938 statistics to which this article refers are to be found in Table IV on pages 204-210.

MEDICAL WORK

EDWARD H. HUME

Some of the significant developments in the medical missionary enterprise are vividly shown in a comparative study of the statistical tables of 1903, 1911, 1925 and 1938. Among the elements of significance, the following should be noted: an increasing use of nationals on hospital staffs, rising standards of professional work, use of educational opportunities, numerical advance, and increasing responsibility assumed by the younger churches.

The 1903 tables make no mention of the use of native-born physicians in any overseas mission hospital. Only foreign men physicians and foreign women physicians are summarized. 1903 was clearly still a period of foreign missionary endeavor. From the 1903 statistics we might infer that the Occidental worker had no nationals as assistants, whether as dressers, pharmacists, or orderlies; or even as members of a home-trained medical staff. Nor can we discover from the record what number of evangelistic workers, natives of each country, were used.

In the few columns available we are given only the numbers of foreign physicians, of hospitals and dispensaries, and of totals of patients. Medical education was not given a prominent place in the thought of the statisticians of 1903. Nursing education was wholly in the future. No reference is made to coöperation with local churches or with governments. Local boards of managers lay still far ahead. The absence of reference to expense accounts suggests that the upkeep was largely met by grants from the Occident; and that receipts from local fees were of minor importance.

By 1911 the picture had commenced to change. Far more Occidentals were being used; but nurses are recorded, for the first time. What is more, there are "medical schools and classes" as well as "schools and classes for nurses." The educational standards were, too often, exceedingly simple; but it had become clear that the Christian medical enterprise was developing a new rootage in the soil through the greater use of nationals.

By 1925, happily, the statistics began to record both "foreign staff" and "native staff," the proportion of Occidentals being still considerably larger than that of nationals. The schools of medicine and nursing were fewer in number and were giving far better instruction.

The 1938 figures introduce a change of fundamental importance, fully in line with the hope on which the present Survey is based, namely, that the work of the younger churches, the rising indigenous churches, may be given the central place, instead of the mission, as in earlier days. The statistics in the medical table have no column for "foreign staff," but only for "national staff"; and include nurses (qualified and student), together with unclassified workers. This is indeed a noteworthy advance.

From the beginning, surgical work has been given major attention in the statistics. Surgery was dramatic; an unsightly tumor, a virulent infection, present yesterday, had disappeared today. Even the missionary doctor, though decrying superstition, was plainly a magician. His knife was the instrument of the immortals. Even as recently as the records of 1925, the habit persisted of dividing operations into major and minor; a custom borrowed from earlier government practice in some countries, designed originally to delimit the categories of work which local assistants, trained in their own country, might attempt. Fortunately, the figures for 1938 have done away with this artificial division. But we are yet without that broad analysis which would tell us what proportion of the work is medical; and how much is surgical, obstetrical, ophthalmological, etc. To report in categories such as these would be one ready way of rousing enthusiasm among the professional friends of medical missions in Occidental lands, and of compelling that self-study by every staff that is still so far from universal.

By 1925, however, we are given a far fuller picture of the professional service rendered than we had even in 1911. We discover, for example, that the patient is already becoming accustomed to coming more frequently for re-treatment. In 1911, the four and a third million individual patients seen did not average two visits apiece. By 1925, the total number of individuals seen had increased somewhat, but visits per patient average nearly three. It would be difficult to point out a more convincing evidence of growing confidence.

Before 1911, the published statistics said nothing about education, medical or nursing. In the figures that year there is a surprising record of teaching. One hundred and eleven teaching institutions reported 830 medical students, while 98 institutions reported 663 pupils studying nursing. It was a significant advance. But by 1925 while the reported number of medical teaching institutions had fallen to but 19, the student enrollment had risen to a total of 914. What really happened was that a great majority of the privately organized classes, conducted in individual hospitals, and often taught by a simple missionary physician, were discontinued as such; while the teachers from scattered areas were brought together into organized schools of medicine with a reasonably sound curriculum. The number of nurse training schools also fell off between 1911 and 1925 from 98 to 72; while pupil enrollments rose from 663 to 1,085. These are wholesome changes. The 1938 figures show 14 medical colleges, with 1,284 medical students.

With increasingly high educational requirements in both India and China, it is possible that the number of teaching institutions that our Christian medical forces can maintain will be still further reduced. It is undoubtedly in Africa that medical missions will need to increase their teaching units in the days ahead, both medical and nursing.

There has been a definite increase in the number of hospitals. The total number reported for 1911 was 576; for 1925, it was 858; and for 1938, it was 1,092. In the next two decades, changes may be expected, both in the numbers of hospitals conducted directly by missionary societies and in their bed capacity. Already Christian nationals are being found ready to take over some of these institutions and run them as private Christian hospitals. It may be found difficult for some societies, with falling receipts, to keep up all the hospitals now under their care. It is a time for thoughtful re-study, especially to see whether amalgamation may not be imperatively called for in some areas where denominational missions have hitherto worked separately.

It is possible, furthermore, that in certain areas, such as Korea, Manchuria and elsewhere, changing political conditions may render it difficult for Christian hospitals and schools of medicine and nursing to continue their service.

As early as 1911, the statistics showed that a few indigenous bodies had started to develop Christian medical work. This was evident in India, in Syria, and in West Africa. By 1925, the movement had grown apace, indigenous Christian hospitals being present in Japan, in several provinces of India, in China, and, to a certain extent, in Africa. In 1938, a further real increase is noted, and it may be assumed that a far larger number of privately-operated Christian hospitals are at work in India, Japan, China, Korea, and elsewhere, than the statistics reveal. Many of these I have had the joy of visiting personally, and know how truly they carry the friendship and support of local church groups.

Still another aspect of responsibility is to be seen in the election, by church synods, of members to the boards of managers of hospitals hitherto operated entirely as mission institutions. One of the first areas where this movement has become apparent is in south Fukien province in China, where the Church of Christ has gladly elected members to the local boards of hospitals formerly conducted by the London Mission, the English Presbyterians, and the Reformed Church of America. I venture to believe that one important step in the next stage of Christian medical advance will be found in the growth of this form of responsibility.

In Japan the number of Christian hospitals remains at 8, exactly the figure reported in 1903. There were 10 reported in 1911. The American Protestant Episcopal Church maintains 5 of the 8 reported in 1938. Its physicians believe that it has been unwise for so many of the Christian forces to withdraw from medical work, as has been the case, merely because government and other agencies have grown so active. This whole matter needs thoughtful re-study.

In Korea 23 hospitals are reported, two of them the notable union enterprises at Pyengyang and Seoul. Moreover the medical college at Seoul has grown in student enrollment since 1925, in spite of the presence of a national university teaching center in the same city.

In China, a country where medical education has made rapid progress, it is worth noting how variously different missions respond to the challenge to use Christian nationals on their staffs as doctors. The Continental missions have not progressed well in this matter, their 17 hospitals reporting only 7 men nationals and 1 woman national on their medical staffs. One of the Continental missions, with 2 hospitals, appears not to employ a single national. Of the British group, the London Mission has the best average, its 15 hospitals employing a total of 33 nationals. In the American group, 169 hospitals report using 416 nationals on their medical staffs. Excellent figures are those of the American Episcopal Church, whose 5 hospitals employ 41 nationals, and of the Southern Methodist Church, whose 3 hospitals employ 26 nationals. These figures are worthy of emulation. To lay stress here is one of the needs of the China group of Christian hospitals. China offers, moreover, an unusually favorable field for coöperation with the national government in broad programs of health.

In the Netherlands East Indies the use of nationals has lagged badly. The Continental societies have 91 hospitals there, and only 14 nationals on the medical staffs, not one of them a woman. One mission alone has 32 hospitals and but 5 nationals among its doctors. It would appear needful to lay new stress on medical and nursing education for nationals.

In India three facts emerge in studying the medical figures. One is that less nationals, whether doctors or nurses, are used in the mission hospitals than in China; the actual proportions in India being an average of 1.2 doctors and 8.4 nurses, per hospital; while in China, the averages are 2.1 doctors and over 15 nurses, per hospital.

Second, the in-patient stays in the hospital less days in India than in China, perhaps because weather conditions make indoor stay less imperative.

Third, the Christian medical forces have been less insistent in India, than those in China, in maintaining medical education at the higher university level. It is certain that the several provincial governments in India, in the days ahead, will make increasing requirements of all medical teaching institutions. The Christian forces must take stock of their resources, and adjust their staff plans to meet this inevitable development.

Probably no field affords so large an opportunity for the medical pioneer as Africa. Medical and nursing education are only at their beginning. National staffs cannot grow until more are trained. The greatest hope one can have for the Christian medical work of this vast continent is that it may be developed with a broad strategy that shall include the wise locating of institutions, the wide use of nationals as early as they are available, and the closest of integration with the life of the churches.

On the whole two needs deserve attention. One is the development of more pioneering in the matter of the Christian witness through medicine. We are on the threshold of a great opportunity here. Trained men and women are needed to undertake the religious aspect of a hospital's ministry; they must be persons who can bring a vital message to the patient in a spiritual need, and who can give it with full knowledge of his mental state and his social background.

A second need is that we have fuller information in our reports hereafter regarding the social and economic factors in the Christian medical enterprise. What is the distribution of males and females among the patients, whether in hospital or in dispensary? Are women responding more eagerly to the Christian medical service offered? In certain areas, has not the time come for men's and women's hospitals to be blended?

We ought to know what proportion of patients pay fully, pay in part, and pay nothing, for their treatment so as to discover what social strata are being reached, and the changed attention that our hospitals might give to the sick in their communities. We should know whether the volume of charity work done measures up to what our Christian communities in the Occident expect. We should know whether our hospitals are winning such a place in the affection of their several communities as to depend on them increasingly for financial as well as moral support; and whether the churches of the Orient are truly taking upon themselves a larger share in keeping open these vital channels of Christian witness.

The 1938 statistics to which this article refers are to be found in Table V on pages 214-230.

BIBLE DISTRIBUTION

EDWIN W. SMITH

To produce for these years a completely satisfactory conspectus is not possible on the basis of the tables provided in the atlases of 1903, 1911, 1925 and this 1938 Survey. For one thing, not all the distributing societies are represented. Three of them work side by side in some fields, but these are not uniformly defined in the reports, and the definition varies from time to time; for example, one society gives figures for Egypt (including in 1903 countries stretching from Syria to Zanzibar) and another for Levant. This makes it impossible always to show the progress, or the reverse, country by country. There is some inevitable inter-society business, one society buying from another and re-selling, and this affects the totals, though relatively not in any great degree. Allowing for all defects in the tables, the first impression is one of astonishment at the enormous increase revealed in most fields. While it is impossible to compare the figures for every country, those from some of the chief fields may be set out in this form of table.

TOTAL DISTRIBUTION OF SCRIPTURES INCLUDING PORTIONS

(Figures in thousands)

	1903	1938	Percentage of Increase
Japan and Formosa	194	1,353	598
Korea	46	735	1,500
China and Manchuria	1,250	9,350	648
Philippine Islands	22	111	440
India and Burma	615	1,357	120
Ceylon	33	87	163
Iran and Iraq	14	63	350
Africa (except Egypt, but including Madagascar)	101	410	306
South America	133	897	574
West Indies	57	147	159
Central America (with Mexico)	51	107	109

The largest increases have taken place in the Far East, in Iran and Iraq, Africa and South America. Generally speaking the growth has been very steady from period to period: e.g. in China the figure for 1903 was 1,250,000; for 1911, 2,600,000; for 1925, 6,203,000; for 1935, 8,764,000.

In the table above Bibles, Testaments and portions (i.e. single integral books of Scripture) are included. By far the largest quantities come within the last-named category: in China, e.g., portions constitute about 99 per cent. of the whole. These little books are used very largely in evangelization by missionaries and are carried by colporteurs in advance of the missionaries. The enormous increase in their sales (in Korea 1,309 per cent.; in Japan, 706 per cent.; in South America, 679 per cent.; in China, 631 per cent.; in India, 101 per cent.) reflects (a) evangelistic activity, and (b) growth of literacy.

Testaments are purchased, as a rule, by Christians and by people who are attracted to Christianity either through preaching or through reading single books. From this point of view the following figures are illuminating.

DISTRIBUTION OF NEW TESTAMENTS

(Figures to nearest hundreds)

	1903	1938	Percentage of Increase
Japan and Formosa	33,800	105,900	213
Korea	2,000	62,300	3,015
China and Manchuria	54,500	78,500	44
Philippine Islands	1,600	6,600	312
India and Burma	36,000	57,695	60
Ceylon	1,800	2,300	28
Iran and Iraq	2,100	5,900	180
Africa (except Egypt, but including Madagascar)	7,300	81,600	1,177
South America	30,000	111,900	273
West Indies	14,800	7,800	decrease
Central America (with Mexico)	14,300	11,900	decrease

The most striking feature of this table is the large increase of Testaments sold in Korea and Africa. Even if the sales to Europeans in South Africa be excluded (and it is not possible to say exactly how many were sold to them) the growth is astonishing.

Finally, complete Bibles are purchased, as a rule, by well-established Christians. Here the figures are very significant of the progress of the church.

DISTRIBUTION OF BIBLES

(Figures to nearest hundreds)

	1903	1938	Percentage of Increase
Japan and Formosa	7,300	22,800	212
Korea	31	8,900	28,609
China and Manchuria	8,300	78,100	840
Philippine Islands	600	6,500	983
India and Burma	24,200	38,500	59
Ceylon	3,100	3,300	6
Iran and Iraq	2,800	3,500	25
Africa (except Egypt, but including Madagascar)	42,800	191,800	355
South America	29,000	74,900	158
West Indies	18,900	37,000	95
Central America (with Mexico)	10,200	13,500	32

Comparing the percentages in these tables, it will be noticed that in some countries the growth in the distribution of Bibles and Testaments is relatively larger than the total increase: this is particularly noticeable in Korea, the Philippines, and Africa. It must be noted that the complete Bible in the Korean language was not published until 1911. The figure for Africa for 1938 is swollen by the sale of thousands of copies of the Afrikaans Bible—it was not published until 1933—but apart from this, the growth is remarkable.

The map of Europe has changed so considerably in these thirty years, that it is not possible to give comparable figures for each country—and, except for the Balkans and Turkey (mostly now in Asia), they are omitted from the 1938 table. There has been one serious setback, namely in Russia (and Siberia), where in 1903 the British and Foreign Bible Society distributed 498,000 volumes and for some years before 1938 not a single volume. For the rest (not including Great Britain and Ireland) the distribution in 1903 totalled 1,270,367 volumes and in 1938, 2,149,586, by the three societies:

American Bible Society	51,138	34,881
British and Foreign Bible Society	971,903	1,781,637
National Bible Society of Scotland	247,326	333,068

According to the tables provided, the three societies in 1903 employed 82 foreign agents and 1,213 nationals; in 1938 (outside Europe) 73 and 1,539. The distribution has increased out of all proportion to the number of agents at work. It must not be overlooked, however, that the Scriptures are circulated by missionaries and others who are not in the societies' employ.

This review would be seriously incomplete were it to omit reference to the progress of translation, the record of which is not included in the tables provided. In 1903, 611 versions were known to exist; in 1938, 1,002. These included:

	Bibles	Testaments	Portions	Selections
1903.....	124	121	312	54
1938.....	178	198	525	101

It should be noted that these figures include a certain number of which no distribution is carried on today. The greatest growth in translation has taken place in Africa, where the British and Foreign Bible Society in 1903 had 88 versions on its list, and 262 in 1938.

The 1938 statistics to which this article refers are to be found in Table VII on pages 30-31.

THE MISSIONARY ENTERPRISE AMONG JEWS

CONRAD HOFFMANN, JR.

In surveying the work of the missionary societies having work among Jews and related activities involving a Christian approach to the Jews, one must be aware of the fact that no complete picture or indication of the extent of the work can thus be given. Many churches in their normal ministry actually do missionary work among Jews though it is not known as such. These, of course, cannot be classified or listed in special categories. Indeed, important as special missions have been and still are in some countries, actually more Jews have come into the Christian faith through the normal processes of Christian witness and pastoral ministry than through special mission effort. Nay more, were the Christian Church actually functioning and fulfilling its responsibilities in so-called Christian lands there should be no need of special missions to the Jews in such lands.

Some may ask, "Why have missions to Jews in this day and age?" Essentially the answer is found in the statement—"In Christ there is neither Jew nor Gentile, bond nor free, male nor female." All men need Christ, for Christ is God's answer to the whole world's need—the need of the Jew as well as the non-Jew. Moreover, if we have no gospel for the Jew, why should we have one for the Moslem or any other non-Christian people? We can make no exception when it comes to man's need of Christ.

Missionary effort among Jews has continued throughout the Christian era. In the early centuries the Church endeavored by direct apologetic approach to convince the Jews that Jesus Christ was the Messiah. Martin Luther, after his break from the Church of Rome, became interested in the conversion of the Jews, but on discovering their stiff-necked refusal to accept his claims, turned against them and denounced them in as violent terms as any anti-Semite has ever done. Today Nazis frequently refer to Luther's experience as justification for their own anti-Semitism.

Organized missionary effort among Jews is, however, a comparatively modern phenomenon. The first missionary society for the conversion of the Jews was established in 1809 as the London Society for the Promotion of Christianity among the Jews. Since then many other societies have been created. Indeed, when organized missionary activity among Jews was once launched it spread and grew rapidly so that by the end of the nineteenth century there were twenty-eight British societies employing 481 missionaries in 120 centers or stations, 20 continental European societies employing 47 missionaries in 17 centers. In other words, there existed at the end of the nineteenth century 90 missionary societies for work among Jews, employing 648 workers in 213 centers or stations.

As a result of this activity, combined with the normal process of conversion taking place within the churches there were at the end of the century not less than 240,000 Hebrew Christians and a total of 750 Hebrew Christians in the active ministry of the churches. In Great Britain 250 pulpits and in North America 125 pulpits were occupied by Hebrew Christians. Since the end of the nineteenth century there has been no great increase in the number of societies working among the Jews. A number of the original societies have been dissolved but others have taken their place. On the other hand, there has been a great increase in the effectiveness of the existing societies.

Of particular interest is the corporate church responsibility for missions to Jews assumed by various denominations in recent decades. Outstanding in this respect is the work of the Church of Scotland which goes back to the middle of the nineteenth century. In North America the work of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., is most notable as a denominational enterprise. Under the leadership of Dr. John S. Conning some eight different Jewish mission centers in the larger cities of the United States have been established. The development of such church responsibility has brought with it an increasing emphasis on what is termed the parish approach to the Jew in contrast, but not necessarily in opposition, to the special missionary approach. By the parish approach is meant the normal inclusion of the Jews residing in the local church parish in the ministry of that church.

Reference should also be made to the work of the Roman Catholic Church for within the last twenty years increasing missionary activity among Jews has been noted. The Roman Catholic Church, unlike the Protestant churches, has established no special missions to Jews. On the other hand, it has within its body two societies, Notre Dame de Sion and the Arch-Confraternity of Prayer of the Catholic Guild to Israel, through which it functions so far as Jewish responsibility is concerned. The work is being carried on through church channels and the various social welfare or charitable institutions of the Church practically wherever Jews are to be found. The results of the work of the Catholic Church on the basis of figures submitted by Joseph Bonsirven, one of their leading representatives, indicate that they are meeting with considerable success.

At the time of the World Missionary Conference of the Protestant churches in Edinburgh the subject of Jewish missions was not taken up. However, pressure from British friends and others interested in Jewish missions led the International Missionary Council to call, in the year 1927, two international gatherings in Budapest and Warsaw, under the chairmanship of Dr. John R. Mott, devoted exclusively to a thorough review of the whole subject of missions to Jews. As a result of these conferences definite recommendations were made to the International Missionary Council to create a special department on missions to the Jews. These recommendations, submitted at the enlarged meeting of the International Missionary Council, held in Jerusalem in 1928, were accepted and referred to the Executive Committee of the International Missionary Council for definite action.

As a result there was established beginning September 1, 1930, an international Committee on the Christian Approach to the Jews, to which the writer was called as a director and general secretary. This Committee held a nationwide, interdenominational conference in Atlantic City during May 1931, the American counterpart of the Budapest and Warsaw Conferences. Today the International Missionary Council's Committee constitutionally is made up of 25 representatives, 7 from Great Britain and Ireland, 7 from North America, 7 from the continent of Europe and 4 chosen at large. Two of the latter are open to the International Hebrew Christian Alliance. The present officers are: The Rev. C. H. Gill, of London, Chairman; The Rev. Birger Pernow of Sweden, Dr. ten Boom, Vice-Chairman; Dr. Conrad Hoffmann, Jr., Director; Dr. Erwin Reisner, Associate Director, and Mrs. Conyers Baker, London Office Secretary. The International Missionary Council with headquarters at 2 Eaton Gate, London S.W.1 and 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City, serves as treasurer.

Jews are everywhere among us. There are more than 16,000,000 in the world today, scattered through all countries as follows:

U. S. A.....	4,500,000
Poland.....	3,200,000

Other countries not listed have Jews, but in numbers less than 100,000 each.

Thirty per cent. of the world's Jewry is crowded or concentrated in just fourteen cities of the world. New York City leads with over 2,000,000 Jews, or one eighth of all the Jews in the world. Then follow Chicago with 350,000, Warsaw with 325,000, Philadelphia with 270,000, Vienna with 176,000, London with 170,000 and Tel-aviv with 140,000.

Wherever the Jew goes he seems, sooner or later, to become a problem. He was a problem in the land he originally inherited, and from which he therefore was driven away. He has become a problem anew in the lands to which he fled. Indeed, anti-Semitism seems eternal and universal: some maintain that it is inevitable and insoluble, and that in some way the Jew himself is responsible. It is equally significant that the Christian Church has always been inextricably involved in outbreaks of anti-Semitism.

Philip Bernstein speaks of "the profound and unalterable anti-Semitism of European Christianity."

Dr. Leo Baeck, chief rabbi in Germany declared some time ago that "to German Jews anti-Semitism seems increasingly synonymous with Protestantism."

One of the most alarming feature of present-day Jewry is the rising tide of anti-Semitism. From it not even America or Great Britain are entirely escaping. No doubt the world-wide economic distress and international uncertainty with its wars and rumors of wars are largely responsible. But whatever the causes—and they are today everything but religious—wherever anti-Semitism arises, the churches of the countries concerned, become actively involved. In Poland, Roman Catholic priests, in Rumania, Greek Orthodox and in Germany, Austria and elsewhere, Protestant clergymen aid and abet anti-Semitic attitudes and actions. To combat this renewed anti-Semitic spirit within the organized church among clergy and laity, is an inescapable responsibility of the modern missions to Jews. The church has little right to pursue missionary effort among Jews unless simultaneously it combats aggressively present-day anti-Semitism.

In its wake has come the necessity of relief for the many victims of anti-Semitism. These include the German Jewish and non-Aryan victims, the needy Jews of Poland and Rumania and, since Hitler's annexation of Austria within the body politic of Nazi Germany, the Austrian Jews and non-Aryans. There are not less than 5,000,000 Jews and 2,000,000 non-Aryans who because of anti-Semitism are unwanted in Europe today. There are the 3,500,000 Jews in Poland, 1,000,000 in Rumania, the 400,000 Jews in Germany, 200,000 in Austria, and the million and one half non-Aryans in Germany and 600,000 in Austria. In Poland 1,000,000 of the Jews are slowly starving to death.

This great tragedy is aggravated by the fact that owing to world unemployment which synchronizes with this rising anti-Semitism, there is no other country or countries prepared to receive Europe's unwanted and persecuted Jews. Not even Palestine offers much hope in this emergency. As a result of the Jew-Arab conflict in 1936, followed by the Royal Palestine Commission's proposal for the partition of Palestine and ensuing negotiations immigration possibilities to Palestine have been drastically curtailed. Thus, whereas in 1935 some 61,000 Jews immigrated to Palestine, in 1936 the number was less than 30,000 and in 1937 less than 10,000. Indeed, the future of Jewry in Palestine has become a much debated question, the final solution of which is of great importance and concern to world Jewry.

In past centuries outbreaks of anti-Semitism were invariably confined to one or at most two or three countries at any one time, leaving other countries to which Jews could flee. Today, however, we approximate universal anti-Semitism made worse by more or less universal unemployment. With increasing anti-Semitism has come diminishing possibilities of escape.

These factors combine to produce within Jewry a growing sense of fear, perplexity, and uncertainty. To all this must be added the secularization of our age which affects Jewry as deeply, if not more, than the gentile world. The majority of Jews no longer attend Synagogue worship. Historical continuity of the Jew has always been symbolized by the Synagogue. When the Synagogue is ignored or discarded by Jewry, as is so largely the case today, will not the Jew, as a separate entity and undigested minority, also go? Can the Synagogue survive the tidal wave of modern secularism and its materialism? It survived in the Ghetto—can it survive in the Emancipation?

With the irreligious drift that follows, life loses all meaning. Some seek relief in a racial ghetto of splendid isolation, some become aggressive and demand their full and equal rights as men. Some whine. Some seek escape in assimilation. Some are bitter and resentful; for many despair or cynicism sets in. Thus history is repeating itself. All the evolutionary experiences of the Jews in past centuries are being repeated, but this time, they are being crowded into a decade or two instead of being spread over centuries.

But this very irreligion has set in motion another and more promising trend, namely: a renewed consideration of the part the person of Jesus Christ may or may not have in Jewish life today and in the future. Much of current Jewish literature deals sincerely and frankly with this question. John Courno's book, entitled An Open Letter to Jews and Christians and published by the Oxford University Press, is characteristic. (In Great Britain the book has been published under the title, Hear! Oh Israel.)

The time is ripe for Christian missions to deal with thinking Jews on this question, but it must be done openly and sincerely. This is a time when Christianity must reveal to Jewry true Christian love and neighborliness and thereby demonstrate that Christianity is absolutely irreconcilable with anti-Semitism, and not synonymous with it as some have claimed.

So much for the framework of present-day missionary work among Jews. Naturally these conditions react profoundly on the methods, approach, and emphasis of the work.

The fact of anti-Semitism compels much more consideration of the Christian constituency. Christian education is imperative to immunize the Christian constituency against the virus of anti-Semitism and so prepare it for active coöperation in combating both the causes and consequences of anti-Semitism. That has been recognized relatively recently as a responsibility of missions to Jews.¹ To fail here will only undermine the effectiveness of all missionary effort.

The day of the "ghetto-ized" orthodox Jew is rapidly passing. Increasingly the Jews are being scattered throughout our cities; they have become a universal neighbor and are rapidly being modernized and secularized. Less apologetic and more realistic Christian virtues are needed. Whereas the special mission and auxiliary institutions may still be necessary in some lands and even in some places in all lands, increasing heed must be given to the community center and the new "parish approach" method. By that is meant the inclusion of the Jew in the normal ministry of the local church rather than his exclusion from all ministry or his singling out for special ministry.

In countries like the United States with many cities of 30,000 to 75,000 inhabitants and 500 to 1,500 Jews, it is the parish approach which alone is feasible and which has as yet unexplored possibilities. None of the societies have as yet made any serious attempt to reach these scattered and relatively small Jewish communities. Perhaps a new type of worker is essential, an itinerant, well-trained, and able to meet with local clergy and to help and encourage them in a ministry to their Jewish neighbors.

Whereas there are Jews, notably rabbis, who will oppose every missionary effort among Jews, experience reveals that even the most aggressive Jewish opponent, will respect an honest, uncompromising confession of Christian faith.

¹ See actions on anti-Semitism on pages 18-20 in the Minutes of the Enlarged Meeting of the International Missionary Council's Committee on the Christian Approach to the Jews, held in Vienna, June 28-July 2, 1937.

The International Committee on the other hand maintains that tolerance toward the Jew is not enough and that the Christian fails in his full responsibility to the Jew until he actively strives to challenge the Jew with the claims of Jesus Christ. This does not necessarily mean that the Jew must accept Christian theology about Jesus Christ. There are many Jews today who, like John Cournos referred to previously, are urging Jews to explore Jesus Christ and to reclaim Him as one of their own.

John McMurray in Creative Society in commenting on the relation of Christianity to Judaism expresses the essential "raison d'être" underlying a Christian approach to the Jews such as the International Committee promotes and envisages.

"In world history the Hebrew people is unique; it is unique because it is the only people whose history is religious through and through. It is this that makes the history of the Jews both the unsolved problem of history and the clue to its inner meaning. Christianity is continuous with Judaism, and the opposition between them is a dialectical opposition. It is in Jesus that Judaism and Christianity meet, and the relation between the two is highly significant. If we are to discover the final reality of Christianity it must be by seeing it once again as the religion of Jesus and remembering that Jesus was a Jew. It was in Jesus that Judaism became a universal religion through the discovery of its own implications, and this discovery was the culmination of a long process of historical development. . . ."²

Today Jew and Christian can and must coöperate in defense of religion and in combat against paganism. They can unite in promoting the fundamental interest of the Kingdom of God. For this, mutual trust and confidence are essential, and today attainable. Perhaps in such common effort against a common enemy both will discover the unity in God which is theirs because of Moses and Christ.

ROMAN CATHOLIC MISSIONS

KENNETH SCOTT LATOURETTE

For Roman Catholic missions, as for Protestant, the present century has been marked by an extensive growth, both in the numerical strength of the Christian communities which have arisen out of the work of missionaries, and in foreign staffs. In the case of

Roman Catholic missions, as with the Protestant, the growth of the Christian communities continues to show an increase. Moreover, both great wings of the missionary movement are stressing, and with success, the creation of an indigenous clergy. However, in the past few years, when the foreign staffs of Protestant missions have remained nearly stationary or have declined, Roman Catholic foreign staffs have increased. Moreover, in certain types of institutions Roman Catholic missions are being rapidly strengthened.

The regions of the greatest numerical growth of Roman Catholic and Protestant Christians in part coincide but are not always identical. In Japan, Protestants outnumber Roman Catholics about two to one and have shown a slightly higher percentage rate of increase. In Korea, the Protestant baptized membership is between a third and a half larger than that of the Roman Catholic Church, but recently the rate of increase of the latter has been greater than that of the former. In China, Roman Catholics have long outnumbered Protestants. Indeed, when the first Protestant missionary arrived, the Roman Catholics within the Chinese Empire probably numbered about 200,000. For many years the percentage rate of growth of Protestants was greater than that of Roman Catholics. In gross totals, however, the growth of the latter has been greater than that of the former, so that in baptized membership Roman Catholics outnumber Protestants between four and five to one. In the past few years the percentage rate of growth in China of the two wings of the Christian Church has been about the same. That of the Protestants still seems to be slightly in excess of that of the Roman Catholics. French Indo-China has less than ten thousand Protestants. Yet it has not far from a million and a half Roman Catholics, the fruit of missions going back continuously to the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. In the Netherlands East Indies, Protestants outnumber Roman Catholics between three and four to one. Latterly, however, the percentage rate of increase of the former, impressive though it is, has not been as great as that of the latter: Roman Catholicism is enjoying a rapid growth in foreign personnel and in numbers of baptized Christians. In Burma, Protestants exceed Roman Catholics in numerical strength and in percentage rate of growth. In India, Roman Catholics outnumber Protestants by about one fourth. This is to be expected, for the former have been continuously at work in India about twice as long as have the latter, and in Portuguese India they once enjoyed far more active support from the civil authorities in making converts than was ever accorded to Protestant missions by the British raj. Of late years, however, Protestants are increasing much more rapidly, both in numerical totals and in percentages. In Ceylon, Roman Catholics outnumber Protestants many fold, a difference which is largely accounted for by the headway which the former made in the days of the Portuguese occupation, now several centuries ago. In Negro Africa, the Africa south of the Sahara, Roman Catholicism and Protestantism are numerically about equal in numbers of converts. In rate of growth, too, the two great wings of the Christian movement are about equal. Both are enjoying a phenomenal expansion. In the adjoining great island of Madagascar, however, Roman Catholics outnumber Protestants more than two to one. They are increasing while the latter seem to be declining. In Latin America and the Philippines comparisons cannot be made on a comparable basis, for here Protestants are laboring mostly among nominally Roman Catholic populations. Interestingly enough it is in these areas that Protestantism has recently been enjoying its most rapid proportionate rate of growth.

Since the World War, Roman Catholics have been stressing the creation of an indigenous clergy. In theory this is not a new policy. For instance, the great Société des Missions Etrangères of Paris, still one of the strongest of the Roman Catholic missionary agencies, was founded in the seventeenth century with the formation of a native secular clergy as one of its express objectives, and for centuries the College of the Propaganda has been training for the priesthood natives of the lands which are under the supervision of the Propaganda. For the past twenty years or so, however, Rome has been particularly emphatic in insisting that an indigenous clergy be raised up. A number of indigenous bishops have been consecrated. The totals of indigenous priests and of lay brothers and sisters have risen in almost every land where missions are conducted. The number of catechists has increased. In general, this parallels the recent rapid growth in the numbers of ordained indigenous Protestant clergy. It is important, however, to note that, on the average, the training for the Roman Catholic priesthood is longer and more exacting than is that for the Protestant clergy, particularly in the lands of the younger churches. It is also significant that Roman Catholics have been very slow to raise Negro Africans to the priesthood and that not since the sixteenth century have they raised an African Negro to the episcopate. In contrast, Protestants have in Negro Africa a larger body of ordained indigenous clergy than in any other of the major regions in which they conduct missions. Yet, while the number of indigenous women and unordained men salaried to serve the Protestant churches and missions has been declining in the past few years, in the same period the groups in the Roman Catholic staffs which roughly correspond to them, native brothers, sisters, and catechists, have continued to grow.

We must again notice that, in a period when the foreign staffs of Protestant missions have been declining, those of Roman Catholic missions have been increasing. This increase has not been centered upon any one country, but has been about evenly distributed over the major lands and regions where missionaries are at work. Thus far, as we have indicated, the differing trends in the size of the missionary bodies have not been appreciably reflected in the relative growth of the number of Christians.

Lastly, we must call attention to the growth of the institutional side of Roman Catholic missions. This has been particularly marked in those types of institutions—hospitals, dispensaries, and secondary and higher schools—in which in the past generation or more Roman Catholic have numerically been much behind Protestant missions. It is through these that Protestants have exerted a marked influence upon the cultures in which they have been set. Here Roman Catholic missions are beginning to lessen the gap between the two wings of the Christian movement.

The 1938 statistics to which this article refers are to be found in Table VIII on pages 33-35.

UNOCCUPIED FIELDS¹

ALEXANDER MCLEISH

INTRODUCTION. It would be misleading to think that areas unoccupied by missions or Christian churches present merely a geographical problem. Evangelism today is concerned not only with unoccupied areas, but also with the problem presented by the existence of classes of people in so-called Christian lands and within "occupied" mission fields whom Christian evangelism has not yet reached. Apart also from geographical and population considerations there are systems of religious beliefs, old and new, which have as yet been little influenced by the Gospel.

The statistics before us show how little impression has been made upon peoples bound by the great ethnic faiths, which, while they give some religious satisfaction, close the mind to the truth of Christianity as Judaism closed the mind of the Jews to Christ's message and work in the days of His flesh.

There are also today great "unoccupied" fields for evangelism among the intelligentsia of all lands with whom other systems of thought hold sway to the exclusion of the Gospel. Notably, there have arisen around the world anti-Christian systems claiming to dominate the whole of life which are in complete enmity with the Gospel of Christ. Thus only can be described Fascism, Nazism, Communism, and Marxist Socialism; and in an even wider field, materialism, syncretism, and religious indifference dominate the minds of great masses of men making them impervious to the Gospel and challenging its claims at every point.

Still further there are unoccupied fields for evangelism within the Christian Church itself where hundreds of millions of nominal Christians have no inkling of that salvation by grace through faith in Jesus Christ which is the Christian evangel.

Before this total picture of the unreached regions of the human mind, the problem of the missionary occupation of geographical areas is by no means the gravest confronting the Christian Church. The proclamation of the evangel is challenged today within the older and younger churches, even more than in regions where it has not yet been proclaimed, yet the need of such regions must not be overlooked.

With this total challenge in mind let us examine the nature of occupation by church and mission among the 2,095,000,000 people of the world.

The Christian population of the world is mainly confined to Europe and the Americas, where there is a proportion of about two Christians to every three of the population, or more accurately 67.8 per cent. Within these areas there are large untouched populations, notably Jews (14,800,000), Moslems (5,673,625), and those making no Christian profession (240,000,000).

Throughout the rest of the world there is one Christian to every 105 people, very unevenly distributed, that is .95 per cent. of the population. This disparity is further accentuated when it is noted that the area of so-called Christian lands is only two fifths of the land surface of the world, while that of non-Christian lands is three fifths.

The "Christian" population of the world is about one third of its total population; namely, 718,000,000 out of 2,095,000,000. Of this number 18 per cent. are Roman Catholics, 7 per cent. are Orthodox (Eastern), and 10 per cent. Evangelicals (Reformed); that is 35 per cent. in all.¹

It has frequently been stated that only about 10 per cent. of the nominal Christian populations of Europe and the Americas can be considered effectively Christian, that is from 50,000,000 to 70,000,000. If this is the case in nominally Christian lands, the situation is still more poignant in the non-Christian lands of Asia, Africa, and Oceania. In these continents there is an average of one Christian in 184 people in Asia, one in 28 in Africa, and one in 4 in Oceania,² but stated thus in averages no idea is conveyed of the sparse and uneven distribution of Christians over these immense areas. The true nature of this occupation can be seen best by studying these continents in detail and showing from the statistics the proportion of missionaries and of indigenous Christians. The sub-joined table illustrates the whole situation.

¹ There is, as is well known, great disagreement between different authorities on the world statistics of religions. The figures given here are the result of comparison of estimates given in publications under Protestant and Roman Catholic auspices with those in the more reliable almanacs. The figure for the population of the world is that given in the Statistical Year-Book of the League of Nations, 1936-37.

² Including only the aboriginal population in the case of Australia and New Zealand, and the Christians among them.

ASIA. In Asia there are 15,177 missionaries, or 13 per million people. This proportion reaches its highest in Palestine where it is 172 per million, and its lowest in French Indo-China where it is only 2. India with 14 and China with 13 conform to the continental average.

In the whole of Asia baptized Christians number 5,504,781, or 4,808 per million people. The Netherlands East Indies have 23,153 per million, and Iran only 207; between these extremes stand India and China with 6,774 and 1,478 respectively. In several of the countries of the Moslem Near East the proportion of Christians is very low, Arabia having only 5 per million people and Iraq 90. The influence of certain obvious factors is recognizable in these figures, such as the historical background of Christianity in the Dutch possessions, the evident hold of Palestine on missionary interest, the slow response in Moslem lands, the effect of large accessions to the church or mass movements as in Korea, India, and Sumatra, the relatively small missionary occupation of Siam and the recent occupation of Indo-China. To the total figure for baptized Christians can be added 510,264 under instruction, while there are considerable European, Eurasian, and Syrian Christian communities not enumerated. The census returns of some of these countries show much larger figures, especially in regard to India and Burma. The present figures, therefore, are useful only when compared with those recorded in the last world atlas, and are not to be taken as a strict census of evangelical Christians. Such a comparison, however, is not within the scope of this study.

The missionary occupation figures given above reveal the fact that there must be many large unoccupied regions as examination shows that this occupation is strongly urban. There are, for example, over 500 missionaries in Shanghai, and many other cities of Asia absorb large numbers. A rough estimate shows that 45 per cent. of the Chinese empire is unoccupied, to be exact, out of 1,608 counties in the 18 provinces, 293 are quite occupied and 206 fairly so. About half the counties in Manchuria are still unoccupied by missionaries among a rapidly increasing population. In spite of the fact that 2 per cent. of the population in Korea is Christian, there is still much territory to be occupied, especially in the north. In Japan the rural areas are largely neglected as the work has been developed among the middle classes in cities and their neighborhoods. Indo-China is occupied by one large mission and two very small ones, and probably one half of its territory is without occupation of any kind. In Siam there is one large mission and three smaller ones, and the work could be doubled tomorrow if the missions possessed the necessary resources. Malaya presents the strange picture of work among immigrant Chinese and Tamils while the Malays, who form half the population are still unevangelized. In Burma the Shans and Burmans have so far proved largely unresponsive so that the bulk of the population has still to be reached. India with 14 missionaries to the million population is relatively poorly occupied. There are a number of areas consisting of 2,000,000, 3,000,000 and 5,000,000 people with no missionary occupation. The occupation of the Frontier States and districts is still only nominal. Nearly 500 Indian States have no missionary occupation, and in many cases their rulers refuse all permission to enter. Missionaries reside in 1,110 centers, a disproportionately large number of which are urban. Out of the 683,740 towns and villages in India and Ceylon, the tables show that there are 21,933 organized and unorganized worshiping groups of Christians, and it is estimated that there may be Christians residing in 50,000 towns and villages altogether. The actual areas and groups of India urgently calling for evangelization are the densely populated districts of the United Provinces, Bihar and Orissa, and Bengal, the Himalayan states, the eight million aboriginals and the fifty-two million of the depressed classes, many of whom if not reached within the next ten years may well drift into Hinduism or Islam.

A comparison may be made here between China and India. In spite of the great difference in the number of Christians, the Chinese proper have proved about as difficult to reach as the caste Hindus and Moslems of India. Number for number results in both countries among these groups have been about the same. A relatively disproportionate number of the 618,010 baptized Christians in China are drawn from the aboriginal population. The general conservatism of the villages and the political disturbances of the last two decades have greatly militated against advance in rural areas in China, and just when progress seemed to be possible the present catastrophe has descended upon the country. In India 90 per cent. of the Christian community has been drawn from the depressed classes and primitive peoples. Yet, in spite of this in both countries there has been introduced a leaven which has pervaded the whole national life, but this "mass movement" has not resulted in any large accession to the Christian Church.

The great Central Asiatic plateau is largely closed to mission work. Chinese Turkestan is occupied precariously by the Swedish Mission in the west and the China Inland Mission in the east. Outer Mongolia under the domination of the Soviets is a closed land. Siberia is for the same reason unoccupied. The Buddhist and Moslem strongholds of Tibet (pop. 2,900,000), Bhutan (pop. 250,000), Nepal (pop. 5,600,000), Afghanistan (pop. 7,000,000), have always been closed lands. The native states of Baluchistan (pop. 405,109) are still unoccupied. The heart of Asia, therefore, is the greatest unevangelized region of the world.

In the Netherlands East Indies the interiors of numerous islands have never been visited, and a large part of southern Sumatra and the extreme north of that island are unoccupied. Out of the 48,000,000 in those parts of the islands where the Dutch Government allows missions to work, less than half are in touch with evangelical agencies, and areas with 12,000,000 inhabitants are definitely closed to missions.

That is to say, there are 36,000,000 beyond the possibility of evangelization in these islands alone.

There is no missionary in the great interior of Arabia or Sinai. Half the villages of Ceylon have no resident Christians. There are only 3,100 Christians in Iran, 326 in Iraq and 908 in Turkey. There are a number of islands unoccupied, Socotra (12,000), Kuria Muria (2,000), Maldiva (80,000), Pescadores (60,000), Saghalien (335,000), Timor (170,000), as well as other areas such as Portuguese India (600,000), Maçao (500,000), French India (300,000), and the Aegean Islands (135,000).

The total strength of the Christian community in Asia shown by these tables including those under instruction is 6,015,045. This probably does not include many children especially in regard to missions with adult baptism. Nevertheless, if the case of India is taken it is known from other sources that the Protestant Christian community numbers at least 2,991,357, while these figures show only 2,718,499, which is 272,858 short of that number. Hence it can safely be concluded that the figures of a missionary census will be less than those of a government census. The church in Asia is still too weak and localized to take up alone the burden of the evangelization of the dense surrounding populations. More missionary evangelism is obviously needed especially in the great unoccupied tracts, but no less in the fields where the church has been so precariously established. The work, too, is passing through times of special disturbance in China, Korea, Manchuria, Mongolia, and Japan. The younger churches in view of the gigantic nature of the task need all the help that the churches of the West can give them. All that has already been done is but an earnest of what should be done if the gravity of the situation everywhere was realized by the churches of the world.

AFRICA. The statistics return 8,447 missionaries in Africa, or 56 per million people. Here there are important contrasts with Asia: the baptized Christians are proportionately over five times as numerous, and the missionaries over four times. There are 56 missionaries to the million population, compared with 13 in Asia, and 24,213 baptized Christians, compared with 4,808 in Asia. The baptized Christians of Africa number 3,593,592, and the addition of those under instruction gives a total Christian community of about five million, but this is certainly an underestimate, and in the Belgian Congo, Angola, and South Africa the church has made much greater progress than the figures reveal. The number of baptized Christians per million people reaches 330,982 in South-West Africa, and falls to 11 in the French

Niger and nil in the French Sudan and Libya. The proportion of missionaries is also highest in South-West Africa (425 per million people), whereas in French Equatorial and West Africa it is very low. The extent to which British possessions predominate among those areas in which there are over 15,000 baptized Christians per million people is significant, but this makes the strength of the church in the Belgian Congo and in Madagascar the more remarkable.

With regard to missionary occupation, it has to be noted that out of the 8,447 missionaries only 767 are in the great Moslem North, the majority of whom are in Egypt and the Sudan. Since the figures were collected Libya, Eritrea, and Italian Somaliland have been vacated, and only a precarious footing is being maintained in the capital of Abyssinia by a band of American missionaries. Equatorial Africa is now no longer the region of darkness which till only recently it was. There is still much ground to be occupied on the borders of Moslem territory. Unoccupied areas are to be found mostly in the West African hinterlands and especially throughout French West Africa. East Africa, especially in Portuguese East Africa, has much unoccupied territory. There is no work in British or French Somaliland, Mauritania, Portuguese Guinea, and Spanish Rio de Oro and Ifni. The Union of South Africa and the British Protectorates of Swaziland, Basutoland and Bechuanaland are relatively well occupied. The Union may be said to be no longer a mission field, although it presents many unsolved problems of further evangelization. Two thirds of Africa are under the control of Roman Catholic powers and this makes work in Equatorial and East Africa peculiarly difficult. The Roman Church is growing steadily stronger throughout these regions. Recently it has inaugurated a new campaign in South Africa which hitherto has been predominantly Protestant. The unoccupied fields, therefore, are mainly in the Moslem north, in the hinterlands of West Africa, especially in French West Africa, in the south and north-east of Angola, in the Mozambique Company's territory of Portuguese East Africa, in French Equatorial Africa, and to some extent in Tanganyika. The hinterland of Liberia is largely unoccupied, and now also must be added Italian territory generally. Among the islands the Moslem Comoro Islands are unoccupied, and the northern part of Madagascar has much unoccupied territory. Work in the Moslem emirates of Northern Nigeria has only recently begun.

This is the picture which a study of missionary activity gives of Africa today, a marvelously different one from that of darkest Africa of fifty years ago.

OCEANIA. A brief reference is all that is needed regarding Oceania. The total population concerned here is not great (2,154,259), and throughout the islands there are 908 missionaries, which is 421 to the million. The eastern half of these islands is fully evangelized, and the other half, including the Solomon Islands and New Guinea has an adequate missionary force, although owing to the scattered nature of the island population much remains to be done. The group of islands sometimes designated Melanesia, which include the latter, is by far the best occupied with 526 missionaries and over 203,000 Christians. It is a striking fact that there are 421 missionaries to the million people compared with 14 in India. This is partly due to the scattered nature of the islands. As a consequence the average number of missionaries might be expected to be high, but it seems higher than necessary. There are many unoccupied regions still in New Guinea, and in the interior of many of the Solomons, but a better distribution of missionaries might be expected to complete the task of evangelization. Many island Christians have proved notable evangelists, but all are not equal in this respect.

SOUTH AMERICA. The statistics record 1,785 missionaries and 472,780 baptized Christians in South America. A recent and more exhaustive study by the World Dominion Press shows 1,696 missionaries and 1,334,370 of a Christian community in the republics alone. All evangelical Christians are not attached to Protestant missions, and there are large Lutheran, Waldensian and other Continental groups to be found, especially in Brazil. In the latter alone there are about 250,000 German Lutherans. As this republic is as large as China it follows that even there, where more than half of the total number of evangelical Christians of South America are to be found, there are difficult problems of evangelization to be faced. The indigenous Christian groups are not recorded here, and it is with this indigenous movement that the great hope for the future lies.

The baptized Christians do not reach 4,000 in Colombia (2,052), Venezuela (3,577), Bolivia (3,767), and those also mentioned as underoccupied, namely Uruguay (1,630), Ecuador (546) and Paraguay (350), but in Brazil they number 229,388. The British and Dutch colonial areas have, as might be expected, the largest number of baptized Christians, the figure being 101,650 for British Guiana and 29,502 for Surinam (Dutch Guiana). Evangelical Christian work in the small colony of French Guiana (pop. 22,000) has only recently been begun. Among the republics Chile returns the third largest number of baptized Christians (58,390), and Paraguay comes lowest with 350. But these figures do not reveal the real situation for the most considerable progress has undoubtedly been made in Brazil. The comparatively small number (13) of missionaries per million people in Brazil reflects the extent to which the indigenous churches of this republic are undertaking their own task. Other facts regarding Christian occupation will be obvious from a close study of the summaries on pages 265-266.

In most of the continent the evangelical Church is very weak, and the whole interior and many tribes of Indians are still unreached. The chief problem, however, is not the Indians (except in certain limited areas), but that of the mestizos, and it is a Spanish and Portuguese speaking church which must be the aim of evangelical workers.

The difficulty of evangelization is increased by the growth of nationalism which limits the activities of the foreigner, and of the opposition of the Roman Catholic Church in some areas. Every kind of Protestant work needs reinforcing, and even where missionaries, owing to anti-religious legislation can no longer discharge the functions of pastors or educators, there are other types of work of a more personal and less formal character, and maybe more important, open to foreigners. Organized activities of all kinds in most of these republics will have to be left to nationals. The sooner, therefore, foreigners are willing to face this situation, the better it will be for the eventual evangelization of these republics.

MEXICO, CENTRAL AMERICA AND WEST INDIES. Nineteen separate political areas are recorded in which are 1,165 missionaries. This is 30 to the million people. The total Christian community is recorded as 1,007,706. The area falls into two closely defined divisions. The colonial West Indies have for the most part long been the field of very active work on the part of evangelical missions and churches. Consequently the baptized Christians range from 53 per cent. of the population in the Virgin Islands to 29 per cent. in Trinidad and Tobago; that is, from just under a third to over half of the people are Christians. In the Latin republics of the region only evangelical Christians are included, and of these there are 30,674 per million people in Panama and the Canal Zone, and 1,264 per million in Salvador. The total Christian community in Mexico (55,652) and Guatemala (21,740) is certainly understated, being about double these figures in each case. In Mexico the existence of a strong evangelical community is particularly important in view of the prevailing irreligion and the restrictions placed on the foreign missionary. In comparison with the large populations of Asia no part of this region could strictly be termed an unoccupied area, and in the British West Indies the problem is rather that of the multiplicity of organizations.

In reviewing in general the problem of evangelization throughout the world it is not sufficient to be content with the total missionary force of 28,000 and with the Christian community of 13,000,000 among so many hundreds of millions (1,420,603,305). In many ways the last hundred years have been remarkable in the history of the progress of Christianity. This is so not only because of the large numbers who have entered the church, but also because of the wide diffusion of Christian ideals throughout all these continents. The obvious lesson is that the larger and stronger missions should be reinforced with the purpose mainly of equipping the younger churches to overtake the evangelization of the still vast unreached populations of their own lands. The larger missions are in close and effective touch with large indigenous groups and have a special responsibility to follow up their past work. Smaller missions are also called for to undertake specific tasks of evangelization which will more than occupy all their resources. It cannot be too often pointed out that the object of all such missionary reinforcements should be to enable the indigenous Christian churches as speedily as possible to take up the whole task of evangelization and to carry it to a completion. Looking only at the needs of the so-called occupied fields the need for foreign missionaries is as great as ever though their task has largely changed, and even if their work is viewed as of a temporary character it will tax the resources of the present generation to the utmost.

With regard to the wholly unoccupied fields which have been mentioned, foreign missions have already overtaken the easier tasks of pioneering and are now confronted with the more difficult situations complicated by geographical, political, racial and religious difficulties. The situation is often rendered more difficult by the neighborhood of a self-conscious indigenous church, and further progress in evangelization is definitely bound up with the spiritual vitality of these churches. In all further advances it is essential that these churches should cooperate with the mission. Without such collaboration little can be done to reach the vast unevangelized hinterlands.

In addition most of these unoccupied regions present special problems. These difficulties, whether of a geographical, political, linguistic or religious nature, all call for missionaries of experience with an intimate knowledge of the customs, languages, and religions of the people. For the most part this means that the more romantic appeal of such pioneer work cannot be presented to the missionary candidate. It is for the various Boards to consider how many of their experienced missionaries can be freed to pioneer these unreached fields and to arrange that their places be filled by new missionaries who can best serve their apprenticeship in more settled regions.

However the quite unoccupied areas be considered, it must never be forgotten that there are large areas still to be pioneered in all the great continents. So, too, there is pioneering to be done in Christian lands where the mind has been captured by many anti-

Christian modern "religions." The unoccupied fields for evangelism, therefore, are worldwide, and call for unprecedented adventure and endurance on the part of the Christian worker as never before in the history of the world. Everywhere the spirit of the world is organizing itself in opposition to the spirit of Christ and the battle is set on the widest scale. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest" for "the field is the world," and our bounden duty and privilege is to "preach the gospel to every creature."

JAPAN AND FORMOSA

GALEN M. FISHER

The representation of the Christian movement in Japan which is given by the tables is somewhat like a posed portrait—stiff and starched and limited to one mood. To compare this portrait with the actuality is one of the purposes of these comments. It should be said at the outset that the compilers of the statistics have been scrupulously careful not to touch up the portrait; only data derived from responsible published sources have been included. Has this caution produced understatement or overstatement? The answer must be "both." Let us be specific.

In the case of the table "Philanthropic" there is marked understatement, and in the case of "The Church," while there is no mathematical overstatement, exaggerated inferences may be drawn by the uninformed reader. As to the former, the reasons are simple: some of the national agencies noted for their philanthropic work, such as the Salvation Army, have somehow failed to submit reports; and more significant still is the fact that the work sponsored by national Christian bodies, whether church or missions, is only a fraction of the whole body of Christian philanthropic endeavor. This is obvious if one examines the list of Christian Social Work Institutions contained in the 1936 issue of the Japan Christian Year Book, which covers twenty pages. In contrast with the table before us, we find not 4 orphanages but 10, not 2 but more than 20 old people's and rescue homes and shelters. These two categories are the only ones given in our table, whereas in the Year Book, there are included in addition, no less than 25 settlements, 22 day nurseries, 4 leper homes, 5 reform schools, and 4 homes for ex-convicts, all of them under Christian auspices.

Many of these enterprises are conducted and maintained by individuals, others by local churches, still others by groups drawn from various communions. The largest of any single classification is headed "Not reported denominationally." To be sure, a large proportion of them were initiated and are still aided by missionaries, but now they are practically all directed by and predominantly supported by Japanese. Do not these facts all suggest that the Christian movement in Japan is dynamic and irrepressible? It overflows ecclesiastical bounds. It leads men and women to daring and disinterested service for their fellows. It is to be hoped that in future studies some way may be found for gathering this supplementary information from the more advanced fields where the dynamic of the Christian faith is at work.

The table on "The Church" shows a grand total of 208,962 communicants in Japan proper and 14,895 in Formosa, or 223,857 together. This is a gain of 78,829, or nearly 36 per cent. over the corresponding total for 1925. With a population of 74 million in Japan and Formosa, the ratio of communicants, other than Roman Catholic, is 1 to 330. Including the Roman and Greek Catholics, it is about 1 to 200. But this ratio should be considerably discounted, because not less than one-third of the communicants should be written off as lost or inactive.¹ While this discount may be partly offset by the considerable number of unchurched Christians, one must conclude that the figures as they stand are liable to be too favorably interpreted. After all, church membership, more than any other aspect of the Christian movement, needs to be weighed as well as counted.

Recurring to the theme of understatement, attention should be called to the fact that in these tables no attempt has been made to report on several important outreaches of the Christian movement. Among them are these: Bible classes for students, numbering between one and two hundred, most of them taught in English, but some in Japanese or German; the Farmers Gospel Schools, numbering about one hundred, which Kagawa has found to be the best approach to farmers; the Christian News Agency, an interdenominational union which secures the publication of articles and news concerning Christianity in the secular press, one result of which was the receipt of inquiries from some 6,000 persons during 1934; the Kingdom of God Weekly, issued for several years as an arm of the nation-wide united evangelistic efforts, with a circulation of 30,000; summer camps for boys and girls, conducted by workers among youth; the manifold activities of the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations other than those embraced in these tables; the movements for temperance and for the abolition of licensed prostitution, always dependent in large measure upon Christians for leadership; and finally, the missionary outreach of the Japanese Church, especially in the mandated areas. This by no means exhaustive catalogue of untabulated activities gives food for thought.

It is now in order to comment more directly upon several of the tables before us, pointing out recent tendencies and drawing comparisons between the data of 1938 and of earlier periods.

THE FOREIGN STAFF. It is common knowledge that there has been a sharp shrinkage in the number of missionaries in Japan during the last decade: the process of devolution was unexpectedly, and perhaps unfortunately, hastened by the financial stringency. The exact figures for the foreign staff in Japan proper were 1,253 in 1925 and 829 in 1938. For Formosa, however, there was a gain of one in the missionary force. The number of North American foreign missionary societies operating in Japan had likewise decreased from 46 to 44. But in Formosa the entrance of the Brethren increased the number from 2 to 3. The Australian Board of Missions and the Y.W.C.A. of Australasia both withdrew after 1925, but the Liebenzeller Mission entered Japan in 1927. Although the Salvation Army was still served by 9 officers in Japan in 1938, it does not appear except in the special table on the Salvation Army, nor were its 121 kindergartens and its medical and rescue work reported.

Certain noteworthy fluctuations in the foreign staff have occurred since 1925. Among the newer societies, the Christian and Missionary Alliance dropped from 14 to 2, the Church of God Missionary Board from 4 to none, the Free Methodist Church General Missionary Board from 10 to 2, the Scandinavian Alliance from 9 to 3; but the Seventh-Day Adventists only 1, that is, from 23 to 22.

Among the older societies also, there have been some very large decreases: the Y.W.C.A. from 23 to 2; the United Christian Missionary Society from 33 to 5; the Y.M.C.A. from 23 to 2; the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society from 72 to 33; the United Brethren from 9 to 4; the Southern Baptist Convention from 30 to 14; the Methodist Episcopal Church from 85 to 49; the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, from 74 to 60; the Reformed Church in America from 39 to 24; the Reformed Church in the U. S. from 52 to 40; the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. from 89 to 62; the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. from 53 to 42; the Church Missionary Society from 65 to 35; the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel from 47 to 33. The staffs of two societies held their own: the United Lutheran, at 33, and the Methodist Protestant at 6. The United Church of Canada missionary force shrank only from 76 to 70, and the Universalists from 7 to 5. The Formosa missions also lost comparatively few: the Presbyterian Church in Canada having increased from 19 to 22, while the Presbyterian Church of England decreased from 22 to 17.

THE CHURCHES. Mention has already been made of the growth in total number of communicants in Japan during the last decade. It will be illuminating to extend the curve further back. The numbers were as follows: 42,835 in 1903; 67,024 in 1911; 134,547 in 1925, and 208,962 in 1938. Figures for the earlier periods for Formosa are not included in these tables. These figures show a fairly steady rate of growth; there has been no such period of reaction such as marked the 1890's, but not a few thoughtful students of present tendencies in Japan anticipate that the wave of nationalism will seriously check the Christian movement during the next few years. It will certainly enhance the importance of strengthening the bonds between the Church in Japan and in the rest of the world.

The number of organized churches increased by 82 per cent. during the decade ending in 1935, from 1,349 to 2,455. The fact that the number of communicants grew only 55 per cent. while the number of local churches grew 82 per cent. shows that the pioneer period of planting new church units has not passed. It also suggests that the independent church bodies now controlled by the Japanese are no less enterprising in church extension than were the same bodies when they were more largely influenced by the missions. Leaders such as Dr. Axling¹ and Dr. Kagawa make a strong case for the contention that there is still need for a great multiplication of churches in the rural areas in order to provide for the largely untouched groups of farmers and fishermen, to whom few of the present organized churches and preaching places are accessible; albeit, it is urged that the programs of such rural churches should incorporate the diversified features associated with the "rural reconstruction unit."

The Sunday-school enrollment showed a sharp rise from 87,283 in 1911 to 194,894 in 1925, but by 1938 it had increased less than two thousand—to 196,284. One explanation for this may be the advances made by the Buddhists in establishing Sunday schools and drawing children who would otherwise have attended the Christian schools; another may be the diminution in the number of missionaries, since they have always been especially active in Sunday-school work. Yet this latter explanation is not borne out by the record of the Nippon Kirisuto Kyokai, whose Sunday-school enrollment has continued to grow, even though the missionary staff associated with it decreased sharply.

The growth in numbers of ordained Japanese ministers has been fairly steady, from 474 in 1911, to 950 in 1925, to 1,759 in 1938, the last figure being nearly 30 per cent. less than the number of organized churches in 1938. The most surprising decrease is that in the number of women in the National Staff, from 1,227 in 1925 to 432, or a little more than one third, in 1938. It may be more than a coincidence that one of the emphatic recommendations in the Laymen's Inquiry volume on Japan (Vol. III, Pt. I, pp. 173-4, 182) was for lifting the quality and training of women religious workers, and by implication, dispensing with the less competent then in service.

A review of the record of some of the individual communions may be rewarding.² The seven columns give these data: 1. Organized churches. 2. Other places having regular services. 3. Communicants. 4. Sunday Schools. 5. Sunday-school teachers and pupils. 6. Ordained Japanese men. 7. Raised for Church.

It will be noted that the Holiness Church achieved phenomenal growth during the decade, but internal dissension and other factors have probably led to a slowing down in latter years. Too much weight should not be given to the contrasts among the communions in respect to contributions for church purposes; since accurate financial statistics are notoriously difficult to procure, a statement illustrated by the fact that our figures for 1938 differ at several points from those to be found in The Japan Christian Year Book for 1936.

No clearer evidence could be asked of the fact that the missions in Japan, true to their John-the-Baptist function, have been decreasing and the churches increasing than the marked decrease in the number of organized churches reported as attached to the missions: from 36 per cent. in 1925 to 2½ per cent. in 1938. (This excludes the Holiness Church figures, which are, in this particular, not clear.) And only six of the missions report any attached churches. In passing it may be pointed out that one evidence of a slightly changed attitude toward the younger churches is the fact that the ministers and other full-time religious workers are referred to as "Native workers" in the tables of 1911 and 1925, but as "National staff" in the 1938 tables.

GENERAL EDUCATION. One of the contrasts between missionary educational policy in Japan and in other parts of Asia is the relative attention given to elementary education. Our table shows only 15 such schools conducted by 3 missions, and The Japan Christian Year Book reports show but three other missions engaged in primary education. Three of the six missions are Anglican. In the past a leading reason for refraining from undertaking elementary education has been the assumed adequacy of the government school system. At the present, a further reason is the pressure of the government to have all children attend the public schools, in order that they may receive orthodox "citizenship education." The missions which do undertake it, however, say that if the kindergarten is so generally valued as a Christian agent, should not the elementary school also be sufficiently valued to justify the cost? And moreover, the church owes its members an opportunity to give their children an education from start to finish under Christian influence.

When it comes to middle and higher education, the tables show that the British Anglican societies have left the field almost exclusively to the North American societies, among them being the American Episcopal Mission of the Anglican family with its large outlay on collegiate education. The government competition and financial difficulties faced by the Christian boys' middle schools, in particular, led Dr. Kagawa to write these arresting words early in 1936: "The Government has wonderful schools and our Christian schools are getting behind the times, so that it is getting more difficult to get good boys to come to them, and our prestige is waning. We have only seventeen Christian schools for boys, and it seems to me that the poorer schools which haven't sufficient equipment to compete with the government schools might well be eliminated. If we want to exert a good influence, let us keep up with the times. This is the time to change technique. Let us have small Gospel schools in the cities, towns, and villages for the training of lay leaders."

COLLEGES. In the collegiate field no new institutions have been established during the last decade, and the total enrollment has shown only a slight increase. Of the 21 institutions here listed, the numbers for men and women are nearly equal, although there are a few others for women which are at times reckoned as colleges. The long-cherished proposal for a union Christian university of the highest rank has made no progress and seems about to be allowed to die. Nor has any progress been made toward realizing the recommendation of the Commission on Christian Education, made in 1932, for a federated Christian university. By dint of intense effort by their trustees, faculties, and alumni, several of the colleges and universities appear to be holding their own, so far as size and solvency go. But there is room for doubt as to the quality both of their student bodies and their faculties, in comparison with the government institutions. Christian educators themselves voice such doubts; for example, in the 1936 Japan Christian Year Book, written by a Japanese educator after many years of service in both government and Christian colleges, these sentences occur in an article on Christian education: "It is not an exaggeration to say that mission schools are making only a futile effort to catch up with government institutions, and making this attempt with scanty means, little thoughtful planning and a group of overworked laborers. They are doing little in the way of direct Christian education. . . . Christian schools and colleges are faced with an acute crisis and Christian education in this country is on the verge of a complete failure. . . . There is a lurking feeling that Christian schools are foreign both in their teaching and in their management. This is especially so at this present moment of rising nationalism in education and in the politico-economic entanglements between East and West." This indictment may be over severe, but there is enough sober truth in it to warrant heart-searching.

THEOLOGICAL SCHOOLS. The problems connected with the education of ministers in Japan have vexed missionary councils for a generation. Twice within a decade special studies of them have been made, the first by the Fact-Finders of the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry, and the second by the Commission on Christian Education. A judicial review and critique of these two studies by Prof. E. S. Cobb will be found in the Japan Christian Year Book for 1935, pp. 85-99. Upon one point there is agreement, namely, that the number of schools should be drastically reduced by combination. Our table shows nine of them, and the 1936 Year Book lists several more. (Formosa has only one.) The nine schools have a student body of 316. The twelve schools reported upon by the Fact-Finders in 1931, had a student body of 273 regular students and 95 regular "voting" members of their faculties. Even after making allowance for "special" students, the cost for both administration and instruction is manifestly excessive. With the same outlay on half as many schools, the quality of the faculties, the student bodies, and the libraries could presumably be much improved, and in addition, an impetus to Christian unity could be given.

MEDICAL. There is a general impression abroad that medical work was all but abandoned in Japan decades ago. There was much ground for that in the nineties; but with the establishment of St. Luke's Hospital in 1900, and later, of the Omi Brotherhood Sanitarium and the Seventh-Day Adventist and Salvation Army hospitals, and the continuing activity of the Church Missionary Society, all of which have grown with the years, the impression must be revised. The largest medical enterprise, by far, is St. Luke's in Tokyo. But there are also many dispensaries and clinics operated by missionaries and Japanese, some of them in connection with social settlements, some of them independently. And a Maternity Hospital, San Iku-kai, founded in Tokyo in 1918 by Imperial University Christian medical graduates, has become the largest institution of its kind in the Empire. It is a non-commercial enterprise and has never received any subsidy from abroad.

Thus endeth the story—not the full story of the Christian Church and the missions in Japan and Formosa, much less of the Christian movement, but enough, it may be, to inject life into these tables and to reinforce confidence in the stability and the vigor of the Christian body in Nippon.

The Christian movement in Korea has made substantial advance since 1925. A few outstanding features during the period have been the organization of the Korean Methodist Church, emphasis on rural evangelism, new impetus for educational work, growing use of the Christian literature and notable gains in church membership and in self-support.

The organization of the Korean Methodist Church in 1930 is undoubtedly an epoch-making event in the annals of the Christian movement in Korea. Annual Conferences of Korea missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church and of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, were united in forming an independent Korean Methodist Church with its own government, discipline, and confession of faith. The Korean Methodist Church is not episcopal. Its administrative officer is the General-Superintendent who is elected for a term of four years. Women are admitted into the ministry. However, the Church maintains fraternal affiliation with its mother churches in America. The Korean Methodist Church and the Presbyterian Church of Korea which was organized in 1907, are the two largest Christian churches with a constituency of about 90 per cent. of the Christian population of the country.

The missionary force shows a decline in numbers. There were reported about 600 in 1925, whereas there are only 462 in 1938. This decline has been due both to an increase of the Korean ministers, and to conditions in the home base such as the world-wide financial depression, theological disagreements, and apparent relaxation of missionary interest. The thinning line of the missionary force is appalling when the religious, educational, and philanthropic needs of unreached millions and the opening of new frontiers of service call for more missionaries for every phase of missionary labor.

The steady growth of the Korean ministry is gratifyng. There are now about one thousand ministers actively serving the church, while candidates for ministry grow in numbers and quality. Many experienced laymen and college graduates enter theological seminaries, while a few who have received training outside of Korea have returned to serve the church. In spite of a large number of theological students in training, it has been impossible for these institutions to supply needs of churches. This demand for ministers is urgent due to retirement of the first generation ministers and decline of missionary force. Recruiting, training, and raising the position of the Christian minister in every phase of his life must receive great emphasis in the years ahead.

Church membership shows marked gain in the last decade. A conservative estimate of the total Protestant adherents for 1938 reached 400,000 and Roman Catholics, 100,000. Of the total 500,000 about 225,000 are active members in several Protestant denominations. However, this Christian constituency of half a million forms a little less than 2 per cent. of the total population of over 22,000,000. So-called leakage in church membership must include the persons who have taken away transfer letters, but have not presented them to other churches, and those thousands who have migrated out of Korea. There has been continuous and steady growth in membership, though there was a drop in 1927 due to unrest outside of the church. An important fact to be noted in church membership is the predominating number of women. This fact has resulted in the development of special programs of work for women and children.

The religious education movement holds its own. Sunday-school enrollment in Protestant churches is as large as the number of total adherents. Bible classes, institutes, Bible correspondence courses, teacher-training classes and daily vacation Bible schools show very vigorous work in Bible study.

Church finance also has shown improvement. The total amount that has been raised in Korea is little larger than appropriations sent there from abroad in recent years. The Korean Methodist Church has almost doubled its contributions to the amount of 380,000 Yen in five years since its organization in 1930, while the Presbyterian Church of Korea has carried an expenditure of over a million Yen ($500,000 in normal exchange rate) in the budget. This is the outcome of early training and systematic planning of the Christians for giving, and of increased responsibility which comes to the autonomous church. The Christian movement as a whole, including missionaries, has suffered from retrenchments and withdrawals during the depression years, though all faced it courageously. There are about 4,500 congregations which own about 4,200 buildings, all but a small number of which they built and paid for themselves. The range of the use of church funds indicates wide activity and interest: congregational expenses, pastors' salaries, evangelism, religious education, young people's work, Bible classes, legislative and administrative agencies, overhead expenses, ministerial relief, leper hospitals, benevolence, foreign missions, rural evangelism, general relief, Bible Society, Christian Literature Society, special grants, theological seminaries and general education.

The present status of educational and medical work is such that it is difficult to make a general statement which will be true of all the institutions concerned. However, it will suffice to state that most of these institutions still properly belong to missions rather than to churches. Practically all of them have their controlling boards composed of missionaries and representatives of churches. All of them are largely manned by well qualified Korean staffs, who in many cases share administrative responsibilities with missionaries. Some of these institutions have missionaries as heads, while others have competent Koreans in charge. Missions in early days provided plants and equipments for them and meager subsidies are still given. However, an increasingly large share of support of these institutions is provided by the income of fees and gifts made on the field. Demands on these institutions are great, though some of them have not had the equipment that they deserve to have.

While most of the schools of the Methodist missions had received government registration before this period, a new impetus for educational work was occasioned during the past decade through the government recognition acquired for seven Presbyterian academies, two as registered and five as designated schools for secondary education. Five or six more schools, mainly girls' academies, have been preparing for such recognition. A new trend for practical education can also be observed. Several secondary schools were changed to industrial, commercial, and agricultural schools, while colleges added agricultural, engineering, and domestic science courses. Professional courses, especially medical and commercial courses have attracted students in large numbers.

There are about three million children of high school age, of whom about twenty-five thousand are in schools; the Christian schools accommodate only 7,000 of these. There are about three millions of college age, of whom about 3,000 are in colleges in Korea; Christian colleges have only about 1,000 of these. These Christian institutions turn away more applicants every year than they take in. However, of the non-Christian population, one out of every 1,000 goes to college while of the Christian population one out of every 400 or 500 has that privilege.

During the past decade the entire Christian movement has paid special attention to rural evangelism. Over 84 per cent. of the population of Korea is rural and the typical Korean church is a village church. The rural population forms the backbone of the church and on its economic strength the financial basis of the church depends. The main emphasis in the rural program has been on the spiritual regeneration and physical well-being of the people. Besides national churches, national councils of the Y.M.C.A.'s and Y.W.C.A.'s have played an important part in rural work, and the International Missionary Council made a distinct contribution to its progress by sending out an expert to study the rural problem.

The production and use of the Christian literature have grown. Besides the Christian Literature Society, which is a union institution, church boards have produced a large quantity of literature for their own constituencies. In addition, much Christian literature has been brought into Korea from Christian presses in Japan.

Benevolent work receives large attention in the Korean churches. Institutions for the needy and relief for the unfortunate are provided according to needs and ability of each Christian community. The Korean church as such does not have medical work, but hundreds of the Korean Christian doctors serve their community in ways not accountable in statistics.

The Christian movement in Korea has its problems, though statistical tables cannot show them. They are problems of readjustment which are natural to growth and stabilization. In spite of all, the Kingdom advances, for He has overcome the world.

The 1938 statistics to which this article refers are to be

CHINA

EDWIN C. LOBENSTINE

THE CHURCH ON THE FIELD. Church membership has increased almost fivefold since 1903. The communicant membership then stood at 112,808. Today it is slightly over one half million (536,089). A comparison of figures of many societies in Columns 3 and 10 would seem to show that the grand total at the top of Column 7 of "Total baptized and under instruction," namely 687,764, represents partial returns only. The figures given by the Statistical Secretary of the National Christian Council would seem to be a closer approximation of the truth. He reports that "baptized noncommunicants" and the church's "immediate 'constituency' bring the total in the Christian community up to fully one million."¹ This figure is more nearly comparable with the statistics of the Roman Catholic Church than that of communicants alone.²

The growth of the Christian community has been relatively steady, as the following figures show:

1903.....	122,808
1911.....	177,774
1917.....	268,652
1922.....	366,524
1925.....	402,530
1936.....	536,089

The losses due to the Russian communist influence a decade ago appear to have been more than made up. There have been no mass movements in the Christian churches in China comparable to those in some other countries. The responsible church and mission authorities have not encouraged such movements. The nearest approach to a mass movement has been among the tribal peoples of Yunnan and Kweichow provinces.³

The number of organized churches is 5,800. In addition, regular church services are held in 6,926 other centers. Worship is thus regularly conducted in 12,726 centers. In 1925, the total number of centers was 10,880, of which 5,424 were organized churches.

The listing separately of five younger churches calls attention both to the progress made in recent years in organic church union and to increasing church autonomy. Of the five churches mentioned, three represent the most significant developments in church union that have taken place in China. The reason for the selection of the other two, out of a considerably larger number of fully organized, administratively autonomous Chinese churches, is not entirely clear. These two wished to be reported among the younger churches. They represent a Baptist church and one section of a Congregational church; the latter having absorbed most of the administrative functions of the mission by which it was established.

The Chung Hua Chi Tu Chiao Hui (The Church of Christ in China) represents a union of 13 churches organized by as many missions.⁴ The Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui was formed through a union of five Anglican and Protestant Episcopal churches. Chung Hua Sin I Hui (The Lutheran Church of China) united more than half of twenty former Chinese Lutheran churches. Membership in these three churches is 184,181. This is over 34 per cent. of a total Protestant membership. The Church of Christ alone has 23.5 per cent. of all communicants. These three and nine other churches have between them 86 per cent. of the total communicant membership.⁵ The remaining 14 per cent. is divided between more than 40 other churches.

Noteworthy progress in Christian unity and cooperation has been made by such federating movements as the National Christian Council (representing 61 per cent. of the Christians); the China Christian Education Association and the Council on Medical Missions of the Chinese Medical Association (both representing an even larger percentage of the educational and medical institutions); the Y.M.C.A.; the Y.W.C.A.; and other interdenominational and undenominational educational, literary and social organizations which are not adequately shown in these statistics.

The tables themselves bear witness, however, to the divided approach of the older churches. In addition to more than 50 churches, Christian work is carried on by well over 100 missionary societies. The 1903 Atlas listed 68 missionary societies. In 1911 there were 92; 138 in 1925; and 132, exclusive of 21 union organizations, today. Of these 2 British, 14 Continental and 30 American societies started work in China after 1900.

The Christian forces find themselves challenged at this time of national upheaval to reconsider how they can overcome the handicap of their divided approach and fit themselves the better to make their distinctive Christian contribution during the long and difficult period of national reconstruction.

THE STAFF OF CHRISTIAN WORKERS. There has been only a very gradual increase in the number of Chinese clergy. There were 610 ordained ministers in 1903; 513 in 1911; 1,305 in 1922; 1,966 in 1925. The number in 1938 was 2,135. The total number of full-time Christian workers reported (Table I, Columns 10-12) is 11,662 (9,235 men, 2,427 women). This is somewhat less than in 1911, when there were 12,108. These figures represent a very great decrease from the number of similarly employed workers in 1925, when there was a total of 27,133 full-time workers engaged in various forms of church and mission activity. Three main factors have been responsible for this great shrinkage—the effects on Christian schools and teaching resulting from the Communist influence of a decade ago; the rising standards for the employment of Bible women and other evangelistic workers; and last but not least, the depression.

The number of missionaries reported is 5,747 (cf. 2,785 in 1903; 4,187 in 1911; and 7,663 in 1925). The peak year was in 1926 when the China Directory of Protestant Missions listed 8,325 names. During 1928-29 there was a drop of over 40 per cent., followed by a recovery to the present figure. During the last five years, 1930-35, the figure has remained around 6,000.

For many years more than half of the missionaries in China have been women. Women formed 57 per cent. of the missionary body in 1903; 59 per cent. in 1911; 64 per cent. in 1925, which is slightly above the present proportion.

The statistics give only a partial indication of the country of origin of the missionaries, owing to the international character of the China Inland Mission, whose 1,325 missionaries represent 23 per cent. of the total number. Of the missionaries whose country of origin is given, 63 per cent. come from the United States and Canada; 20 per cent. from Great Britain; and 12 per cent. from the Continent.

In 1938 of the total number of missionaries, 1,398 were located in North, 1,547 in East and 1,065 in South China, chiefly along the coast; 906 in Central China (Honan, Hupeh and Hunan); 775 in West China; and 65 in the special districts of the far North-west.¹ The number of missionaries in the four western provinces (Kansu, Szechwan, Kweichow and Yunnan) has remained remarkably constant the past 20 years at between 750 and 800, excepting during periods of evacuation to the coast.

FINANCE. This is the first time the attempt has been made to furnish figures showing the total cost of Christian work in different lands and the sources from which the funds are derived. The results, while inevitably incomplete, are nevertheless of very real value.

The total amount spent in China in the year under review was over $11,742,429. This is an impressive sum. The asterisks attached to the grand total figures of Columns 1 and 2 indicate that the sums received from abroad are "partial returns only." The same is undoubtedly equally true of the grand totals of Columns 5-8. A study of the returns reveals important gaps. It is regrettable, for example, that no financial figures are given for the extensive work of the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A.; nor for the support of the foreign staffs of a number of the missionary societies.

Of the above sum, nearly $5,000,000, just under 42 per cent. of the whole, was raised in China. This is remarkable, considering the low average income of the Christians in China, the majority of whom are farmers.² The $728,351 contributed for church work came mostly from Chinese Christians. They also bore part of the cost of the support of Christian schools and hospitals, though these institutions were dependent on a wider constituency for much of their support. It is significant that over $2,000,000 was raised in China for educational work and $1,641,214 for the support of hospitals and medical schools. School and hospital fees account for a substantial part of these totals. New sources of support are, however, developing. Education is increasingly appealing to Chinese benevolence. School and college alumni associations are becoming active in raising funds for their Alma Maters. Departments of education, both national and provincial, are making grants to Christian institutions. The Ministry of Education in 1935 allotted to the twelve registered Christian colleges $265,000

² Dr. James Yen gives $180 (Chinese currency) as the total average annual income per farm family of five in Dinghsien. The most authoritative book on the economic condition of China's farmers is J. Lossing Buck's Land Utilization in China.

(Chinese currency) out of a total of $720,000 set aside for thirty-one private higher educational institutions. In recent years generous grants have been made also by the Rockefeller Foundation and by the American and British Boards of Trustees of "Boxer" Indemnity Funds.

Hospitals derive their incomes from two main sources, the missionary societies and patients' fees. They will appeal increasingly hereafter to Chinese benevolence.

The total cost to the missionary societies of their work in China was over $6,826,294. How much over we unfortunately do not know, and probably shall not know, till there is a more general standardization of mission accounting.

Published figures do not make possible an answer to the question as to how many cents out of each missionary dollar in China go for church support, education, medicine and other forms of Christian service.

Of each dollar raised in China it appears that 42 cents is spent for education; 32.5 cents for medical care; 15 cents for church support; leaving about 9.5 cents for other forms of Christian activity.

In the totals in Column 3 for each group of societies it appears that 72.6 per cent. of all money from abroad came from North America, including Canada; 20.7 per cent. from Great Britain; and 6.7 per cent. from Continental societies. Analysis of the sources of income of the China Inland Mission would doubtless alter somewhat these percentages. A comparison of Columns 1 and 2 shows the relative amounts each society is spending on its foreign personnel and on its work programs. (Cf. The Church Missionary Society 67 per cent. for missionary support, 33 per cent. for work budgets; The Methodist Missionary Society 6 per cent. only for its work budgets; The American Board slightly over 12 per cent.) Comparison of Columns 2 and 9 brings out the proportion of the cost of those programs being raised in China, exclusive of the support of missionaries. (Cf. The Methodist Missionary Society raises in China 93 per cent. of the cost of its work programs; The United Church of Canada 51 per cent.; The Methodist Episcopal Church, South 32 per cent.; The Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. 70 per cent. and the China Inland Mission 10 per cent.)

EDUCATION. During the past decade there has been a decrease of about 20 per cent. in the total number of students in mission and church educational institutions. The present number stands at around 250,000. The decrease is confined to the elementary schools. The number of elementary schools has dropped during the decade from 7,114 to 2,795, due to restrictions on religious teaching in schools, to the depression, and also to the development of good public schools in rural areas as well as in cities.

The number of students in Christian middle schools has increased during the same period by 71 per cent., from 25,597 to 43,879. This increase has been accompanied by a decrease in the number of middle schools from 330 to 255, due to the necessity of improving the quality of the teaching. Further concentration in fewer middle schools is regarded by many Christian educators as highly desirable if they are to make their distinctively Christian contribution.

There has been a gradual increase in the percentage of girls in Christian middle schools. They now make up about 30 per cent. of the membership in schools of this grade.

The grand totals in Columns 2 and 6 (Table IV A) show that roughly one out of every four elementary school children goes on to middle school. A comparison of the figures of individual societies in these two columns throws light on their educational policies. The American Board, for instance, reports 77 students in middle schools for every 100 in elementary schools; the Svenska Missionsförbundet 151; The Methodist Episcopal Church 36; The Presbyterian Church of England 15; The United Church of Canada 10.

Many societies report no middle schools. The China Inland Mission, with a communicant membership of 89,665, reports only 9,457 children in elementary schools and gives no figures for the students in 63 middle schools. If, as many believe, the missions must look to the middle schools for much of their lay leadership, a comparison of middle school and church statistics will repay study.

In no department of Christian work in China has there been so marked an advance in recent years as in higher education. The number of college students has doubled since 1925; from 2,811 (2,521 men, 290 women) to 5,858 (3,210 men, 1,456 women). The increase since 1903 has been more than six-fold.¹

Progress will be noted in the decrease in the number of colleges and universities in line with the Burton Report of 1922. At that time there were 23 Christian colleges and universities. Today there are 13.² Particularly noteworthy is the steady increase in the number of women students in Christian colleges. Only 23 women students were reported in 1911; and 290 in 1925. There are today 1,456, a five-fold increase in 10 years. Women constitute today 27 per cent. of all students in the Christian colleges. The higher education of women has been greatly stimulated by regulations of the Ministry of Education requiring that all registered universities be co-educational. Educated women are increasingly influential in all progressive movements in China today.

¹ Rev. Earl H. Cressy, Executive Secretary of the Council of Higher Education of The China Christian Educational Association, reports that 10 per cent. of all college and university students in China are in Christian institutions. He says the same percentage holds true of middle school students.

² The College of Chinese Studies is not included in the 13. It is designed to meet primarily the needs of foreigners.

The degree to which Christian higher education has been confined to the coastal provinces is seen by studying the figures and geographical location of the several institutions. They show that 91.5 per cent. of all students in Christian colleges are studying in the coastal provinces; 22 per cent. in North China; 56 per cent. in East China; 13.5 in South and South-east China. This leaves only 3.5 per cent. in Central, and 5 per cent. in West China.

The training of church workers is reported by the missionary societies as carried on in 31 theological (Table IV D) and 131 Bible training schools (Table IV C). The former schools report 974 students; the latter 4,014. This gives an average of only 31 students per school—striking figures these in a day when the necessity of developing an ecumenical Christianity is increasingly recognized. These figures differ widely from the results of the very thorough study of theological seminaries and Bible schools in China made in 1935 by a commission headed by Dr. Luther A. Weigle. That study showed 13 Class A institutions (11 theological seminaries and 2 women's schools) with 552 students. These institutions require for entrance senior middle school preparation or above. In addition there were reported 47 other institutions of lower grade with 3,083 students. These schools were listed as follows: Class B 14, Class C 24, Class D 3, and Class E 1. The Class B institutions require junior middle school preparation, the others less. One institution only requires for admission a college degree. Since at least 1,000 students are graduating annually from the Christian colleges and universities, and nearly ten times that number from other universities in China, and since, moreover, each year hundreds of students return from abroad with post-graduate degrees, the low basic cultural training required of those entering theological seminaries gravely endangers the future influence of the Christian church. This danger will increase as the number of missionaries decreases.

MEDICAL WORK. During 1938 more than 1,500,000 individuals sought medical and surgical help in the 300 mission hospitals. Total treatments exceeded 4,808,630. The number of mission hospitals remains practically the same as ten years ago. During this period, however, the number of beds in these hospitals has increased from 16,608 to over 20,892. The number of dispensaries has risen from 496 to over 594. This reflects a recent tendency to extend the extra-mural services of the hospitals, especially in rural areas. The number of treatments increased by 2,000,000.

There has been an encouraging increase in the number of Chinese doctors serving on the staffs of mission hospitals. The number has risen from 373 (307 men, 66 women) in 1925 to 634 (480 men, 154 women), an increase of 70 per cent. This development is most encouraging and should be continuously stressed. It has, unfortunately, been accompanied by a 43 per cent. decrease in the number of missionary doctors; from 499 (381 men, 118 women) in 1925 to 287 (211 men, 76 women) today. The decrease is serious. It calls for earnest consideration by the missionary societies in view of the greatness of the need. A new field for service is opening in rural areas calling for missionary doctors possessing a pioneering spirit and the ability to explore by actual experiment how best to extend the usefulness of the Christian hospitals to the rural population.

Approximately one quarter of a million in-patients were cared for in mission hospitals during the year. The inclusion in the statistics of "in-patient days" makes possible a comparative study of the bed occupancy in mission hospitals. The 300 hospitals report a total of 2,612,540 "in-patient days." While grand totals in Columns 7-9 are marked as incomplete, they are nevertheless worth studying. Insofar as they are correct, they show that the average number of days each hospital bed was occupied during the entire year was only slightly over one out of every three. It hardly seems possible that this should be true. A more accurate check is arrived at by taking the figures reported by the individual societies or hospitals. A few of these, chosen somewhat at random, are listed here. They reveal a bed occupancy during the 365 days of the year as follows:

Lester Hospital, Shanghai.....	301 days
South Honan Union Hospital.....	283
Norsk Lutherske Kinamissionsforbund.....	281
Cheeloo University Hospital.....	246
Methodist Episcopal Church, South.....	210

There are in China today six medical colleges under mission auspices, one each in North, Central, South and West China, and two, one for men and one for women in Shanghai.¹ All six of these institutions are union, though the Yale-in-China Medical School represents a union with the provincial educational authorities and not with another mission.

Note the high percentage of women studying medicine (28.7 per cent.). All but the two Shanghai institutions are co-educational. Contrast these figures with 10 medical schools (not including the Peking Union Medical College) in 1925 and 55 medical institutions and classes listed under this heading in the World Atlas of Christian Missions of 1911. Concentration of medical teaching in a few institutions is making possible the maintenance of higher educational standards. The missionary societies are finding difficulty in financing even these six institutions. None of them is adequately financed to do the best work.

Next to the large percentage of women medical students, perhaps the most striking single fact brought out in these medical statistics is the rapid rise of the nursing profession in China. Twenty years ago few hospital superintendents would have ventured to prophesy that by this date educated Chinese women would be available as nurses in general hospitals. Two decades ago, except for foreign nurses, the nursing of men was almost entirely by men. The Atlas of 1925 reported 320 "qualified nurses." Today in mission hospitals alone there are 1,656 "qualified nurses" and 3,955 "student nurses," of whom a large majority are young women. During the past few years nursing has become an honorable profession for educated Chinese women. This achievement is in the main the result of the conception of women's place in society developed in Christian girls' schools and the character of the foreign nurses.

PHILANTHROPY. This table gives a very inadequate conception of the philanthropic work of the Christian forces in China. It reports merely a few orphanages (26), averaging only 25 children each; and two old ladies' homes, with a total of 37 inmates. The table is of interest mainly in showing the small importance placed upon orphanages in the Protestant Christian movement in China. This is in sharp contrast with the policy of the Roman Catholic Church, which places great emphasis on this type of an institution. In them the Roman Catholic Church lays the foundation for increase in the number of Christian homes, the members of which have been nurtured from infancy in the Christian faith and equipped with a trade to make them economically independent.²

¹The Peiping Union Medical College, while Christian in origin and purpose, is not officially connected with any church or mission organization.

The bulk of Protestant Christian benevolent work finds expression in other ways: in the care of the sick, in institutions for the blind, the deaf and dumb, the lepers, the insane; in relief work in times of famine, flood or war; in grappling with the problems of poverty through agricultural colleges and demonstration farms and through active participation in the government's program for rural reconstruction.

THE Y.M.C.A. AND THE Y.W.C.A. The few figures in Table VII, reporting the work of the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A., give little indication of the important service rendered by these two organizations. Without them the Christian movement would find itself today very greatly handicapped. Their main contribution has been in inspiring and developing an active leadership of lay men and lay women. In this they have been remarkably successful. Two figures bring out this fact for the Y.M.C.A., namely, 289 Chinese Secretaries and 8,284 "leaders."

While no similar figures are available for the Y.W.C.A., that Association has afforded to the women graduates of Christian middle schools and colleges, as the Y.M.C.A. has to men, a trained leadership to help them as they take their place in the life of the community and engage in various occupations and forms of community service.

The depression has borne heavily on both Associations. This resulted in a very serious reduction during the past ten years in the foreign leadership of both organizations. During these years the number of foreign Secretaries in the Y.M.C.A. has dropped from 87 to 10; and in the Y.W.C.A. from 64 to 13. This loss is most unfortunate, coming especially at this time. While compensated for in part by the rise of the Chinese leadership, it nevertheless remains true that more foreign Secretaries are urgently needed and are much desired by the national committees of both Associations.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

E. K. HIGDON

The most significant fact revealed in a study of comparative statistics for the Philippines during the last quarter of a century is the development of a Filipino church. In 1911 the Protestant Church had 80,000 members and adherents. In 1935 the number had reached a third of a million.¹ Twenty-five years ago the church reported 37 ordained and 843 unordained Filipino Christian workers. Now it has 472 ordained and 1,248 unordained men and women on its staff of nationals. In 1911 the contributions on the field for church work amounted to $37,137 and in 1938, $102,693.

During this period the church has shown an increased interest in medical and educational work and has accepted a large measure of responsibility for the institutions dedicated to those services. Silliman University, Union Theological Seminary, Central Philippine College and the Union High School of Manila not only have a good proportion of Filipinos on their faculties but also have many representative Christians on their managing boards. The Union College of Manila, until 1935 a department of Union Theological Seminary, now operates under its own charter and is supported by three Protestant churches in Luzon—the United Evangelical, the Methodist Episcopal and the Disciples of Christ. The number of Filipino doctors and nurses on hospital staffs and in dispensaries is now far larger than the number of medical missionaries, and a few hospitals are managed entirely by nationals.

The Protestant Church has not made this rapid growth by taking men away from the Roman Catholic Church; it found many of them away. The concern about vital religion responsible for the separation contributed to the phenomenal development of Protestantism.

The free movement of population from densely settled communities to new lands has also favored the rapid growth of the evangelical church. Homesteaders by the thousands have gone south to Mindanao and north to the Cagayan Valley and each family or group has become the center of a growing Christian community. This movement has taken place largely in the decade which closed in 1935 and has coincided with the devolution of missions and the development of a church-conscious Filipino leadership.

Another important fact not revealed by the statistics but indicative of the virility of the new church in the Philippines is the number of small groups, not schisms, which have sprung up. They have grown like trees from seeds that have fallen into fertile soil. Some of them have only two or three congregations, others a larger number, but all are indigenous.

Although the Protestant Church has but one member in every 50 of the population, it exerts an influence out of all proportion to its numbers, and it counts "sympathizers" by the thousands.

From the beginning the Church has shown a passion for witnessing and has used education, medicine, social service, rural reconstruction, preaching and the ministry of music, pageantry and art to win men to Christ.

Special note should be made of the extent to which both the missions and the churches have worked coöperatively and in union undertakings. In 1901 the Evangelical Union was organized and a statement of principles agreed upon. These included (1) division of territory to avoid duplication and overlapping, (2) definite purpose to build one church in the Philippines, and (3) coöperation in schools, production of literature, etc. In the last thirty-five years three of the major denominations have formed the United Evangelical Church and other groups now look with favor on the proposal to have only one Protestant Church. Union educational, union medical, and union literary work have prospered as an examination of the figures will reveal.

Another fact behind the figures is the rapid devolution of mission organizations, especially within the last ten years. In 1911 there were 167 Protestant missionaries in the Philippines. By 1925 the number had grown to 287 and now, thirteen years later, this Survey lists 295. But an analysis of the statistics shows that a decrease has occurred in the groups working among the "Christian" Filipinos where the Spanish and Roman Catholic background and training enable missionaries to find men who could be prepared for ordination without a long period of education, while the increase has been among the groups working with non-Christians or largely through schools. In the former the number of Methodist missionaries has been reduced since 1925 from 50 to 30; of Disciples from 25 to 2; of Baptists from 33 to 30; of Presbyterians from 65 to 62, a total reduction of 49. In the latter the increases have been in the Protestant Episcopal mission, from 37 to 52; in the Christian and Missionary Alliance, from 6 to 18; and in the Seventh-Day Adventists from 30 to 54; a total of 51. Two or three independent groups such as the International Church of the Foursquare Gospel have entered the field and added ten or a dozen missionaries to the list.

The decrease in the membership of those missions working in areas where Filipino leadership has been most readily found and trained has been 35 per cent. during the last ten years. That fact alone might mean little or much in the process of devolution if it had not been paralleled by a trend of great significance, the absorption by the church of many of the missions' functions. There is no mission of the Disciples of Christ today and the missionaries are called by the Christian Church. The Baptist mission is in the process of rapid devolution. The Methodist mission has worked for years in such close relationship to the church that the uninitiated can with difficulty discern any division of functions. The Presbyterian mission has a larger membership than any other but nearly all its personnel is assigned to institutions and works under the management of boards chosen in part by the Filipino church.

These statistics tell an inspiring story of a passion for witnessing to the power of God in the lives of men, of coöperation and union made possible by wise planning in the early stages of the work, of the gradual devolution of missions and the development of a Filipino church.

THE NETHERLANDS EAST INDIES

HENDRIK KRAEMER

The most conspicuous feature of this Statistical Survey, in comparison with former ones, is of course the occurrence of younger churches as special items. In preceding statistical surveys the bodies mentioned were American, Continental, and, especially, Dutch missionary agencies. This is not only an indication of change in respect to organization, but also of missionary policy and orientation. Some general remarks about the main trends of development in the Christian cause in the Netherlands East Indies appear, therefore, appropriate, in order to provide a general setting.

The Netherlands East Indies is not one of the best known of the missionary areas in the world. India, China, Japan, and Africa attract a far greater amount of interest. This has two understandable reasons: Most of what is written about this mission field is not in English and therefore cannot reach the leading part of the missionary world. Then, the peoples and societies of the Netherlands East Indies, although very interesting in themselves, are neither politically nor culturally of great moment to the world outside, and never have been since the Middle Ages. Yet, in some respects the Netherlands East Indies is a very remarkable mission field. There is in the first place the fact to which both Dr. Latourette, in his Missions Tomorrow, and the World Dominion Press Survey of The Netherlands Indies, have referred, namely that the number of indigenous Christians there is large in comparison with other better-known mission fields. The total number of indigenous Christians in the Dutch East Indies is computed in the Colonial Report (Koloniaal Verslag) of the Dutch Government for the year 1936 as totaling 1,610,533. This refers to the indigenous peoples who have become Christian as the result of Protestant missionary work. Roman Catholic missions are also extremely active in the Netherlands East Indies, and the total number of the Roman Catholic indigenous Christians is given in the same Colonial Report as numbering 443,537. The total number of indigenous Christians is, therefore, more than two millions, in a total population of about 61 millions. Moreover, the increase of the number of Christians has been rather rapid in the last decade; to both the Protestant and the Roman Catholic ranks there have been added approximately 40,000. The Netherlands East Indies is, therefore, the missionary area with a most favorable proportion of Christians in comparison with the total population. Of course, numbers are not alone significant of the influence of a spiritual movement such as the Christian Church, but in a statistical survey this point deserves, by the nature of the case, to be stressed.

In the Netherlands East Indies there are regions where the missionary endeavor of the previous century (building in part on what had been done in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries by the clergymen appointed by the East-Indian Company to spread Christianity) has resulted in creating compact, racially and culturally homogeneous, groups of Christians. We refer to the strong Batak Protestant Church (Hoeria Kristen Batak Protestant) with 381,677 Christians in the North of Sumatra, a church that is continually growing and actively at work amongst the remaining pagan Batak, and which is confronting with increasing vigor the problem of Islam, which is the religion of the rest of the population of Sumatra. The Northern part of Celebes, inhabited by the Minahassian tribes, is entirely Christianized (Minahassische Kerk, numbering 248,126 Christians). All signs point to the probability that the central part of Celebes will also largely become incorporated in the Christian fold through the efforts of some very successful missions at work there. If we add to this the fact that the Sangi and Talaud Islands, lying between North-Celebes and the Philippine Islands are wholly Christianized, it becomes evident that there is a great Christian block in this central part of the Archipelago that may develop into an important instrument for the witness to Christianity in these parts of the world. In the Moluccas we find also a compact mass of Christians spread over the many islands that are scattered here in the South Seas. Trends indicate that the Eastern and South-Eastern part of the Netherlands East Indies will also become largely Christianized. These compact groups of Christians, that are largely homogeneous in their composition, outlook, and institutions, are in a stronger position for representing Christianity in an overwhelmingly non-Christian environment than are weak and widely scattered groups of Christians. Yet, the fact that for economic reasons there are in many parts of the Archipelago small groups of diaspora-Christians, belonging to these Christian peoples, is not without significance. One of the most interesting developments of recent years is that the constantly increasing number of Batak Christians emigrating to the rigidly Moslem country of Atchin (the Northern point of Sumatra) maintain a very intimate connection with the church in their home-country.

Paganism is disappearing very rapidly. In a near future we shall have a situation where two great religions exist side by side: Islam, which in the Netherlands East Indies is becoming more and more active, and Christianity. The fact that the vigorous young Batak Church will have to gain its own spiritual experience and development mainly from the confrontation of this formidable and stubborn adversary of the Christian faith, is of even greater significance than the remarkable fact, constantly cited in missionary literature, that the missionary enterprise has achieved considerable results in the wholly Moslem island of Java with its forty-two millions of inhabitants. The indigenous Christians of Java who are now partly united in autonomous churches, and partly cared for by the various missionary societies, exceed 50,000. In comparison with the church in the rest of the Moslem world this is a remarkable figure, the more so because every year a stream of new converts leave their traditional Moslem community and enter the Christian Church.

There is another point, peculiar to the situation in the Netherlands East Indies, that deserves to be stressed. There exists in the Netherlands East Indies the so-called Indian Church, a body rather difficult to explain. It is partly a legacy of the past. In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries when the East Indian Company exercised the entire administrative control over the Archipelago, the church, in which the Dutch colonists and the native people held membership, was entirely under the control of this merchant-society which was at the same time a political power. One condition, stated in the charter assigned to the Company by the government of Holland, was the obligation to spread Christianity amongst the non-Christian population of the new-won territory. The clergymen, who were appointed to execute this missionary task, worked, therefore, in the pay and under the control of the East Indian Company authorities. In 1798 the Company went out of existence and the administration of the Netherlands East Indies was taken over by the government in Holland. The government, therefore, had to assume also the care for the indigenous Christians and for the ecclesiastical life of the Europeans living in the Netherlands East Indies. The greater part of this latter group were Eurasians. The native Christians in the Moluccas, who formed the bulk of the indigenous membership, and those that were spread over the rest of the Archipelago became incorporated with the Europeans into one ecclesiastical body, that was wholly supported by the government, and had to live by its ordinances. In the beginning of the nineteenth century this included nearly all the native Christians, because then the work of private missionary societies was still in its infancy. For financial reasons in the course of the nineteenth century the native Christians of the Minahassa (North of Celebes) and of Timor and adjacent islands, who were the converts of one of the missionary societies, were also incorporated in this church.

As a result of this evolution more than 600,000 of the indigenous Christians of the Netherlands East Indies are now incorporated in one Church which includes also the greater part of the European Christians, who have church connections in the Islands. For many decades this remarkable fact of a church in which colored and white people were united passed unnoticed because in reality they worshipped separately as is customary in a colonial atmosphere. There existed no ecclesiastical consciousness whatever, because the church was felt as a branch of colonial administration. However, after long consultation and deliberation, there occurred in 1935 a highly important change in the whole situation. Church and state have separated. On historical grounds the government continues to contribute a large sum to the expenditure of the church, but the church has acquired almost complete freedom to regulate its life and organization according to its own ideas. The exceedingly important result of all this has been that the Indian Church has entered now on a new career. The former method of treating ecclesiastical and spiritual life as a branch of governmental administration is dying out and is being replaced by a quite new ecclesiastical consciousness and a feeling of Christian responsibility. The Indian Church is now constituted as a federation of regional indigenous churches (Minahassa, Moluccas, Timor) and a European church, which cooperate and which meet together in the General Synod. The autonomous indigenous churches that are included in the Indian Church have also their own regional Synods. So, the unity of European Christians and various groups of indigenous Christians in one church is now no longer a lifeless administrative scheme, but is becoming more and more a living reality. The Indian Church has now become, and will in the future increasingly become, a very influential factor in the Christianization of the Netherlands East Indies and in the quickening of corporate Christian life among European and indigenous Christians. The indigenous Christians, that never in the past have been incorporated in the Indian Church, are now autonomous churches (i.e., the Batak Church in North Sumatra, the three churches of indigenous Christians in East, Central and Western Java) or are still under the care of missionary societies.

In reading the figures in the Statistical Survey the situation sketched in the preceding lines has to be kept constantly in mind. The other special point that needs emphasis, in order to judge conditions in the Netherlands East Indies, is that in the Statistical Survey, the significance of the European Christian does not figure in the picture of the Christian situation in that part of the world. There hardly exists in any other part of the world a federated church that includes with the indigenous church a European section of not much less than 100,000 members. Besides this, there exists in the Netherlands East Indies a small, but very active group of Dutch Christians (about 15,000), who are not included in the Indian church, because they are members of the Dutch Reformed Churches (Gereformeerde Kerken), which ought to be distinguished from the Established Church in Holland (Nederlandsch Hervormde Kerk), with which the Indian church has closer connections. They lead a vigorous ecclesiastical and missionary life and they as well as the European part of the Indian church, are coming more and more to see their place and obligation in the general Christian situation in the Netherlands Indies. This is a fact that may not be overlooked if one wants to have an adequate grasp of the actual situation.

Some other salient facts ought still to be mentioned. In the first place one must be aware that most of the autonomous indigenous churches still need substantial financial support from the home base. In the second place most of the mission fields suffer from a serious understaffing of European and indigenous forces. The opportunities for expanding the work are on many sides very tempting, and the fostering of active religious and ecclesiastical life in the indigenous churches demands great attention. In the third place the medical and educational work of missions went through difficult times on account of the severe retrenchment of government grants. At the same time the extension and deepening of educational work as a means to educate the Christians or to establish contacts with the non-Christians, with or without government aid, is urgently felt. In the fourth place, the production and distribution of Christian literature is still in a very unsatisfactory state. In the fifth place, much progress has been made in the last ten years in the field of youth work, and work among women and girls is receiving increasingly more attention.

The 1938 statistics to which this article refers are to be found in the following tables: Table I—Church on the Field, pp. 52-53; Table II—Foreign Staff, p. 89; Table III—Finance, pp. 128-129; Table IV—Educational, pp. 165-166, 193, 196, 201, 204; Table V—Medical, p. 216; Table VI—Philanthropic, p. 232.

FRENCH INDO-CHINA AND EASTERN SIAM

W. A. PRUETT

French Indo-China has just passed its twenty-fifth, or "silver" anniversary of Protestant evangelical occupation. At the close of 1911, the Christian and Missionary Alliance succeeded in getting the first missionary into that previously closed land. There were many great difficulties to be met and overcome, such as, government restrictions, bigotry, racial pride, and religious fanaticism of idolaters. On the other hand, missionary work there has been greatly facilitated by the colonization work of the French government, providing good roads, a splendid educational system, hospitals over the land, and insuring peace and order. The missionaries have therefore been able to devote themselves exclusively to the supremely important task of preaching the Word and building the Church of Christ. The work has grown and developed until it now embraces all five states of French Indo-China and Eastern Siam.

Barely begun in 1911, very little missionary work was accomplished before the World War broke out. In 1918, the work was resumed with intensified ardor, so that what has been done may be said to date almost exclusively from 1918.

By the end of 1925 with only a handful of missionaries working among more than twenty million people, the ground-work for a strong church had been laid. The translation of the entire Bible was almost completed, and was shortly placed, for the first time in history, at the disposition of sixteen million Annamese people. Other translations of the Scriptures rapidly followed. An infant church of 432 communicants had sprung into being. A fledgling Bible school for Annamese was started in 1922, which rapidly grew in attendance to 98 in 1930. This Bible school, with another one in Cambodia, soon began to supply us with desperately needed trained native workers, of whom we now have more than 130 doing yeoman service in giving the Gospel to their own people. It would be hard to overestimate the importance of this trained corps of consecrated native pastors and evangelists.

Profiting by the experience and wisdom of missionaries in older fields, we were able from the very beginning to formulate policies which have proved invaluable. Believers were organized as soon as possible into churches and made to realize something of the responsibilities of self-support. Then followed the larger work of forming the churches, branches, and districts into a composite whole. Gradually the missionaries pushed the native leaders into positions of responsibility, they themselves taking the back-ground. "They must increase—we must decrease," might have been our motto; not that the missionaries should decrease in numbers, for many more are still needed, but that executive authority should be relinquished as soon as expedient into the hands of competent native leaders.

Self-support and self-administration have ever been kept in view as imperative objectives of missionary work. The privileges and responsibilities of self-support and self-administration have been constantly presented to the native churches and their response has been most gratifying. In 1925 there was only one self-supporting church in French Indo-China—at the end of 1935 there were 74. In 1925, the total membership was only 432—ten years later that number had grown to 8,975, more than 2,000 per cent. increase. The church is well organized, having national and district committees, elected by the native delegates at their annual synods.

The establishing of these self-supporting indigenous churches has a two-fold benefit to the missionary. It broadens the scope of his activities, permitting him to reach places which he otherwise could not, and increases his influence and enhances his relationship with the church. He no longer "serves tables," but is free to give himself more unreservedly to "prayer and the ministry of the Word." In these chaotic days, when the presence of foreigners is becoming increasingly distasteful to Orientals, it is refreshing to realize that "in Christ" there is neither "East nor West" but one body having mutual love, respect, and confidence. Experience has proved that even in churches which have attained self-support, the close coöperation, wise counsel, and spiritual ministry of the missionary are indispensable to the proper growth and development of the indigenous church. The standards of holy Christian living, in the New Testament concept of the subject, needs stronger emphasis.

The spiritual life of the indigenous church has been greatly enriched by the regular Bible and prayer conferences held under native leadership. The publishing of a well-rounded monthly Bible magazine in the Annamese tongue has played no insignificant part in the development of the indigenous church during the last six or seven years. Special efforts have recently been made to further develop Sunday school and young people's work. In places where money is unusually scarce, as in Cambodia, self-support is sometimes achieved by the offerings of local produce instead of money. Numerous churches have organized evangelistic bands to visit the unsaved, giving effectual witness of the grace of God. In the last ten years, scores of churches have been built, almost exclusively with native funds. A most encouraging feature is that the Annamese churches, not content with developing the work among their own people, are now sending workers and contributing toward the evangelization of some tribes people.

In closing, it should be pointed out that the evangelization of French Indo-China and East Siam is still in the pioneer stage. In vast areas, millions of Annamese, Cambodians, Laotians, Siamese, and tribes people still await the coming of the missionary. The Christian and Missionary Alliance is endeavoring, under God, to meet this need by continuing to send out reinforcements until the entire field shall be adequately manned. This society now has a field staff of 60 missionaries, composed of 28 couples and 4 single ladies, of which number 75 per cent. are constantly in active service on the field. This year, 10 new missionaries are being sent out (5 couples) which will give a total of 32 couples for the evangelization of these 27 million souls.

The 1938 statistics to which this article refers are to be found in the following tables: Table I—Church on the Field, p. 53; Table II—Foreign Staff, p. 89; Table III—Finance, p. 129; Table IV—Educational, pp. 166, 196.

SIAM

Siam is not a large country. With an area of 200,000 square miles, and a population of only 13,000,000 people, it cannot be ranked as a great power. But it has been filling its little niche in the world, and will, in time, have a very definite contribution to offer to the family of nations.

Roughly, this country is divided into four sections—the mountainous north, formerly called Laos; the central plain, with Bangkok, the capital, at its base; the eastern plateau; and the southern peninsula. Since the climate is tropical, and, moreover, especially trying, the loss of missionaries throughout the years for health reasons has been very great.

In this land, six missionary societies are working at present. The Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. has by far the largest work, entered in ten stations, five in the north, two in central Siam and three on the peninsula. The Churches of Christ in Great Britain and Ireland, with a staff of but three missionaries, is doing a splendid work, especially among the Mon people. It has one station in Peninsular Siam. The work of the American Baptist Mission has been chiefly among the Chinese in Bangkok. Recently they dedicated a new church, the largest Protestant Church building in that city. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, also located in Bangkok, has two very fine schools, one for boys and one for girls. The little chapel at the latter institution is a gem of beauty. The Seventh-Day Adventists have two widely separated centers of work, one in Bangkok, and the other in eastern Siam. Their preaching has produced great interest wherever they have gone and will surely bear, in time, a rich harvest.

One must not forget, however, that all these missions depend on the American Bible Society, with its offices in Bangkok, for Scriptures and portions which form the basis of all their evangelistic preaching and teaching.

As a result of the work of these various missions there has arisen a large body of Christian people, gaining in numbers, character and ability with the passing of the years. Recently (April, 1934), a majority of these Christians (8,100 out of 8,700) united to form the Church of Christ in Siam, the most important event in the history of the Christian Church in this land during the past ten years at least.

Except for the Christian and Missionary Alliance and the Seventh-Day Adventist mission, all these societies have been laboring in Siam for thirty years or more. By examining the statistics in the atlases of Protestant missions, one can see readily the growth in the various departments of work.

One of the most startling results of missionary labors in Siam is the growth of the educational work, especially since 1911. At that time there were only 37 mission schools, very few of which offered more than four years' work, and none of which boasted a complete high school course. Only 800 students attended these schools. By 1925, there were 53 schools, carrying part of full grade school work, and four institutions which might be termed high schools. Not all of these, however, offered the full four years of training. At that time the number of students was over 3,000, an increase of 2,200 in fourteen years. After another thirteen years we find there are today 65 grade schools (an increase of 12) many of which offer also some high school work, and there are now six full-fledged high schools, honored by the government for their contribution to education. Moreover, the receipts of these schools have grown in the last thirteen years from $54,000 to $81,688, and the pupils from 3,000 to 5,569.

At first the need for more educational missionaries for this growing work was met by the increase in foreign staff. But, during the last ten years, with an ever decreasing staff, many ordained evangelists were of necessity drawn into full-time or part-time school work. Naturally, the evangelistic work suffered thereby. The increase in the number of Christians between 1911 and 1925 was 3,870. That from 1925 to 1938 was only 350!

One must not feel too sad, however, about the decrease in growth in numbers of the Christian community. There has been a compensating increase in Christian character and ability all along the line. The last decade has been marked by a notable demand for church buildings, and many congregations are now worshipping in handsome edifices rather than in lowly homes or bamboo shacks. Self-support and self-government have become more and more predominant also.

The growth in the medical work in Siam has been almost as startling as that of the educational work—and that without any marked increase in foreign staff. A continuously growing group of national physicians, nurses, and trained workers share in the glory of the strides made in the last decade. The growth is not shown as an increase in the number of hospitals and dispensaries. Actually, there has been a decrease in these. Here, the development has rather been toward better hospitals, more fully equipped, more respected and trusted by the community. Compare the 890 in-patients of 1911 with the 5,000 of 1938; and the $36,700 receipts in 1925 with the $83,200 in 1938.

With the aid of the American Mission to Lepers, the growth in the work for these unfortunates has been astounding. From a tiny asylum with 8 wretched inmates in 1911 has grown the beautiful leper colony near Chiangmai to which Dr. McKean gave so large a part of his life and strength, and the newer, yet ever growing colony nurtured by Dr. McDaniel at Sritamarat on the Peninsula.

Siam is largely an agricultural nation. Bangkok is of course a large city, but no other town in the country can boast of having a larger population than 50,000. There are market towns, and provincial centers, scattered here and there. But by far the largest part of the people live in agricultural villages.

In Eastern Siam, Christian work has only just begun. From the interest revealed, it seems that the seed planted should bear good fruit. But, as yet, there are no churches established. In central and south Siam churches are found chiefly in the towns. Scattered groups of Christians may meet in villages here and there. But practically no organized churches exist outside of the towns. In northern Siam, however, conditions are very different. In this district there are many thriving churches in country villages, where the opportunities for rural reconstruction are ideal, and the need for trained leaders to do this type of work is paramount.

On the other hand, mission work in central and south Siam has suffered great losses in the number of Christians found in the rural districts, due to the fact that touring evangelists have been forced to give so much of their time to educational tasks and other duties centered in the towns. (This has already been pointed out above.) There is a great need for a rural-minded agriculturally trained, devotedly evangelistic type of missionary for the work in these rural areas. Only thus can we hope for the formation of country churches in the other districts in Siam like those we find in the north.

BRITISH MALAYA

T. CAMPBELL GIBSON

The population of Malaya is one of the most mixed in the world, so that the Christian task is not one, but many, each part dealing with one racial or language group, and for all practical purposes being independent of the others. The figures given include work in English, Malay, two or three Indian dialects, and at least eight or nine Chinese dialects. To include all these in one grand total figure gives no indication of the progress in any one group, nor do the statistics reveal whether there are any important sections of the population not being reached at all. Malays form 45 per cent. of the population. They are Moslem by religion, and practically nothing is being done for Moslems, so that the figures given really cover only work done amongst about 50 per cent. of the population.

No new missions have entered the field during the last thirty years, and probably no more are desirable, unless it be a mission whose chief aim would be to reach the Moslems. The total number of missionaries shows a steady increase, although individual missions have experienced ups and downs. The women missionaries have decreased by 33 per cent. during the past thirteen years. The Salvation Army sent its first workers to Singapore in 1935. It speedily made a place for itself, especially by its work amongst the unemployed and prisoners.

Educational work has gone through a large development, in which the Methodist Episcopal Mission has played a leading part, reporting in 1935 the huge sum of $650,000 (gold) as raised on the field for educational purposes. This mission feels that it has probably reached the peak of its educational growth. The number of girls in school still falls far below that of boys, but the disproportion is decreasing showing a growing demand for trained girls, of which the missions would be wise to take advantage.

Apart from one small institution of eight students reported by the Seventh-Day Adventist mission, no educational work of college grade is done by the missions. The only colleges in Malaya are the government ones in Singapore, one medical and one arts and sciences. Many students go abroad for university education, some to Hongkong, but most to Great Britain. The needs from the Christian point of view might be partly met by the formation of a strong Student Christian Movement in the colleges in Singapore. A little Christian work has been attempted amongst their students, but has suffered from lack of leadership and the crowded curriculum.

There is one feature of the educational statistics which calls for attention, and that is the absence of any theological college. The churches have each their own system for training men, but none is completely satisfactory. The ideal solution of the urgent problem of providing an educated ministry for the growing church would seem to be the formation of a union college supported by all the missions. With mutual confidence, theological and ecclesiastical differences need not present an insuperable obstacle, but there are real practical difficulties in the way. One is the provision of a teaching staff from understaffed missions, and the other is the question of the teaching language. English would seem to be the only practical one, yet that would not be the best medium for teaching men whose work is to be done in Chinese- or Indian-speaking congregations. This whole question calls for careful consideration.

The primary importance of the statistics is their bearing on the growth of the younger churches. The communicant membership has more than doubled in the last thirteen years, and multiplied tenfold since 1903. A small part of this growth is due to immigration of Christians from China. In 1935 the Chinese evangelist, Dr. John Sung, visited Malaya, and there followed a real renewing of spiritual life in the Chinese-speaking churches and greatly increased evangelistic activity on the part of the Chinese Christians. Figures of adult baptisms for the subsequent years show a gratifying increase. Yet there is no room for complacency. The statistics reveal the startling fact that the total baptized Protestant community is only .7 per cent. of the whole population.

The financial figures are incomplete, and it is impossible to draw from them any conclusions as to the progress of the givings of the younger churches. In Malaya figures may be misleading, as the income of the church is so directly affected by the irregular movements of the rubber and tin markets that even a decrease in givings for one year may not mean a decrease in the spirit of liberality. There is little doubt that that spirit is steadily increasing.

Figures cannot easily show the growth of self-government, but two important events took place in 1935. The Methodist Episcopal General Conference authorized the formation of a separate Conference for its Chinese-speaking churches, and the English Presbyterian mission handed over to the presbytery of the Chinese churches complete control over all church matters, including the work of missionaries in the congregations.

It is pleasant to report another fact which also cannot be recorded in statistics, that the spirit of coöperation amongst the churches is growing.

INDIA AND CEYLON¹

ALEXANDER MCLEISH

MISSIONARY OCCUPATION. The statistics of 1938 (after including the Salvation Army, Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. figures) show a total of 5,478 Protestant missionaries for India and Ceylon. Burma is not included here. This number is somewhat smaller than that for 1925 when the total was 5,555. There has been a loss of 61 men and 120 wives, while women have increased by 145 and short-term workers have decreased by 42. Between 1925 and 1938, however, the total rose (1933) to 6,231, which (in 1938) shows a decrease of 753.

A good index of this situation is seen in the reduction of residential stations which in India were 1,213 in 1911, 1,204 in 1925, and 1,197 in 1938. This decrease has been more marked in Ceylon where it has fallen from 69 in 1911 to 46 in 1938. The total decrease is, therefore, 39 residential stations. The number of missionaries per million people, which reached 17 in the peak year, now stands at 15 per million. This proportion is double in Ceylon. The decreases of missionaries are most notable in Bombay and the United Provinces, where they are over 100 respectively, and in Bengal and Ceylon which have each decreased by 75. Other provinces which show decreases are Assam, Baluchistan, Hyderabad, North-West Frontier Province, Rajputana and Sind. There have been increases in the Punjab and Delhi (30), Kashmir (15), Mysore (68), and Bihar and Orissa

(49). The continual closing and opening of stations, the decrease of staffs here and increase there, new missionaries in new stations, and the coming and going of 700 missionaries on furlough each year, all tend to disturb the even progress of the work. The larger and older missions have been greatly depleted, and many new missions have taken up work or increased their staffs. If short-term workers (58) are deducted as well as those on furlough (700) and wives (1,346), there remains an effective working force of 3,374. Thus one third of the apparent total number of missionaries is not available to meet the demands of regularly organized work. When it is further remembered how large a proportion of this small body is located in the larger urban centers and how many are in charge of institutions it can readily be understood how few are available to meet the new opportunities which are arising on every hand today.

NATIONAL WORKERS. It will, therefore, be asked how far national workers have increased to make good the losses in the missionary ranks in view of the greatly increased obligations of church and mission. During the last thirteen years the number of ordained men has increased from 2,021 to 2,522, being a difference of 501. In view of the fact that in the same period the Christian community has increased by 42 per cent., this increase (25 per cent.) is not commensurate with the needs of a growing church, especially in view of the decreased missionary personnel.

Non-ordained national men workers (including teachers) have increased from 31,231 in 1925 to 34,333 in 1938, an increase of 3,102, which includes all in the service both of mission and church. In connection with this must be taken the fact that the number of women workers, including teachers, has fallen from 14,216 in 1925 to 13,297 in 1938, a decrease of 919; this, too, at a time when the demands of women's and girls' work were never greater.

¹ Interpretation of Statistics. This interpretation has been prepared by a comparison of the statistics included in this 1938 Survey with those of 1911 and 1925, of a district survey conducted by the National Christian Council of India in 1925, of material collected biennially for the Directory of Christian Missions in India, Burma and Ceylon, and of several commission reports and sectional surveys of the National Christian Council. The comparison was completed and checked at Nagpur, the headquarters of the National Christian Council, by the writer.

Editor's Note: Figures quoted in this article vary from those offered elsewhere in this volume and from those in the World Missionary Atlas of 1925. Mr. McLeish has had access to figures for both 1925 and 1935 in India which were not available to the editor of this Survey. The variations are not great and do not invalidate the conclusions drawn.

TRAINING OF WORKERS. The institutions devoted to the training of Christian workers numbered about 108 with 2,647 students in 1925, and today (1938) there are 117 Theological and Bible schools with 3,806 students. This shows an increase of 9 institutions and 1,159 students. Among these are 31 theological schools and colleges, the remaining 86 being classed as Bible schools with respectively 711 and 3,095 students. For a rapidly growing church this provision is obviously inadequate. While teacher-training institutions have decreased from 77 to 67, the students have increased from 2,515 to 3,287, that is by 772.

Students in training, therefore, number 7,063 following courses lasting from two to four years, which gives a supply of about 3,000 or less new workers a year to meet losses in a total staff of 36,857 and new demands are arising in many directions.

Out of the 771 students in theological colleges it is interesting to note that there are 21 women. The 86 Bible schools have an attendance of 3,095; the number of women (266) in these appears to have remained stationary during the past thirteen years.

Taking Ceylon separately there were 9 Bible schools in 1925 with 122 students, while our statistics show 1 Bible school with 15 students in 1938. The Directory figures for 1935, however, give 4 such institutions with probably 60 students. The conclusion, however, is clear that the educated Christian youth of the church are being attracted elsewhere than into Christian service, the opportunities for which are also being reduced owing to the decreases in the financial resources of churches and missions.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY. From the tables it appears that there are now 1,067,143 communicants compared with 757,663 in 1925. The total Christian community for India and Ceylon is 2,718,499 compared with 2,215,891 thirteen years ago. These figures are somewhat less than the total of Protestant Christians given in the 1931 census which for India and Ceylon was 2,801,180. If 200,000 be deducted, as an estimate of the number of Protestant Europeans and Anglo-Indians in the census, this leaves 2,601,180 for the Indian Protestant Christian community. The census, however, was taken four years earlier than our figures,¹ and at the present rate of increase would now probably show 2,991,357. Hence our figure of 2,718,499 falls short of this census estimate by about 272,858. This reveals a fact of which many missionaries have been becoming conscious, namely, that there are numbers of lapsed Christians not returned by the churches and missions. The drift to the cities and to outlying areas in search of work, especially of the depressed class Christians partly accounts for the difference between these two sources of information, and it is possible that the next census will reveal a still larger number in this lapsed class.

The total baptized community in 1925 was 1,893,019, which rose to 2,452,814 in 1938, an increase of over 29 per cent. This shows the same difference between our figures and those of the census, which reveal the greater rate of increase of 40 per cent. The fact which emerges is that a census enumeration reveals a more favorable situation as to numbers and rate of progress. India is one of the few mission fields where there is such a census, so that it is right to conclude that in Africa and Asia generally the results recorded by missions and churches are also underestimated.

CHURCHES. The Christian community is gathered into 11,824 organized congregations and 10,109 unorganized groups meeting for regular worship, 21,933 in all. This gives an average of about 124 persons for each worshipping group. Compared with 1925 there is an increase of 4,839 in organized congregations and a decrease of 4,879 in unorganized groups. If we assume that the unorganized groups have become organized, this would account for most of the decrease, and, if so, this means that such unorganized groups have nearly all become organized. It is unlikely, however, that the unorganized groups have decreased by 40 during the thirteen year period. Yet in view of the fact that the provision of pastors has not kept pace with the growth of the Christian community, it would seem that the resources of the church are being devoted to the service of organized congregations and the depleted mission funds have not been able to supply the needs of unorganized groups, which undoubtedly exist in large numbers, but many of which have not necessary regular meetings for worship.

A study of specific areas bears this out. Provision for regular worship among depressed class groups in certain areas has been falling off. In this connection it may be noted that there are only 2,522 ordained pastors for 11,824 organized congregations, a figure which is very difficult to understand. Again, the total ordained and unordained workers for the care of 21,933 worshipping groups is only 12,696. This fact speaks for itself.

The position of the younger churches shown in the statistics is that 3,220 of the 11,824 organized congregations are under their care, and only 930 of "the unorganized groups having regular worship."

¹The figures used in the 1938 Survey are those for 1935 as published in 1936-7.

The inference is that the missionaries and their helpers are responsible for nearly all the unorganized groups (10,109). The younger churches appear to have only 340 out of the 2,522 ordained men for the care of one third of the organized congregations, and 1,738 out of the 10,174 unordained workers to supplement the ordained pastors' efforts and care for 930 unorganized groups in addition. The burden of provision seems, therefore, to fall more heavily on the younger churches, and the missions are much better equipped for their share of the responsibilities. It has to be noted also that 536,000, or 22 per cent., of the baptized Christians are under the care of the younger churches to meet the needs of whom they have only one sixth of the available force. The position of the indigenous churches does not appear to be too healthy, and it would be difficult for them at this juncture to take on additional responsibilities.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS. The Sunday school organization in India is among the best in the mission field, and nearly all the missions share in the support of the movement which has led to a great increase in the efficiency of the teachers all over the land. The statistics report 14,605 schools with 696,481 teachers and scholars. In 1925 there were reported 18,400 schools with 693,736 scholars. This drop in our statistics of over 3,795 schools can only be accounted for by the defective returns. The Indian Sunday School Union, however, reports 18,451 schools, 39,944 teachers and 768,218 scholars for 1935 (Report, Oslo Convention, 1936). Many of the inefficient village schools which sometimes met on Sunday and were returned at the earlier date as Sunday schools have been discontinued, so that the present increase is all the more significant. In view, therefore, of the much larger returns given by the Sunday School Union, the apparent decreases shown in the present statistics must be considerably modified, but we have no details covering the provincial situations, as the Indian Sunday School Union figures are on the basis of missions.

COLLEGES. The figures in the statistics for the colleges differ from those in the detailed analysis in the Lindsay Commission Report and in the recent statement of the Central Board of Christian Higher Education (31st March, 1937) and we therefore look to these specialized studies to give us the main facts. The returns for 1911 reported 37 colleges with 4,982 students, those for 1925 gave 36 institutions with 11,467 students, the Lindsay Commission (1930) gave 38 colleges with 15,312 students, of whom 1,932 were Christian, while the present figures, amended by reference to the returns of the Board, give 34 colleges with 13,180 students. It will be seen again that there was a peak figure between 1925 and 1938.

STAFF. The Commission reported 833 teachers, of whom 245 were Indian Christians and 411 non-Christians, the remainder (177) being European. The total Christian staff was, therefore, just over 50 per cent., the Indian Christians being 29.5 per cent. of the total. The Central Board Report for 1935 shows 299 Indian Christians, 389 non-Christians, and 172 missionaries. A comparison with the Commission's statement shows an increase of 27 in the staffs. The Indian Christians have increased, however, by 54, while the non-Christians have decreased by 22 and the missionaries by 5. The total Christian staff has thus risen to 54 per cent. and the Indian Christians to 35 per cent. of the total. A factor also to be taken account of is that many of the younger men in subordinate positions are non-Christians and a large proportion of the responsible positions are held by the Christian staff.

CHRISTIAN STUDENTS. The number of Christian students tends to rise and has increased from one seventh to one sixth in the five year period since 1930. Although Christian students still form a small proportion of the total, this is often due to the fact that the colleges are situated in North and Central India in especially difficult areas, or where there is a small Christian community. There were, in 1935, 10 Christians out of 183 students in Edwardes College, Peshawar, 13 out of 811 in Christ Church, Cawnpore, 8 out of 274 in St. Andrew's, Gorakhpur, 5 out of 566 in Wesley College, Bankura, 10 out of 311 in Indore, 50 out of 1,075 in Forman College, Lahore, 18 out of 364 at Hislop College, Nagpur, 58 out of 1,409 at the Scottish Church College, Calcutta, and 34 out of 907 in Wilson College, Bombay.

FINANCE. Fees and government grants defray the major part of the cost, and usually the societies have only to meet the salaries of the missionary staff. In some cases they do not even do this. While the ideal might be to have a wholly Christian staff, that is not practicable where the running of these institutions depends so largely on fee income. The colleges are evangelistic through the personal influence of the Christian staff, and are of service to the church in that they can give Christian education to Christian students with a view to providing leadership.

HIGH SCHOOLS. The statistics here are little guide as they show only 326 high and middle schools, while from the Directory we know of the existence of 765. A revised statement has been prepared and will be published in the next Directory showing 301 high schools and 464 middle schools. The statistics figure is probably that of high schools only. The number of pupils given as 72,740 may include in the case of high schools, the middle and primary sections, and, in the case of middle schools, if any are included the primary sections. Among the 464 middle schools there are some which are undoubtedly sections of the same school recorded as a high school.

Fortunately, a survey of Christian high schools for the same year (Miss A. B. Van Doren, National Christian Council) gives a careful analysis of the situation. The Bishop of Dornakal in that book quotes the number of high schools for 1931 as 287 and of middle schools 417. This shows an increase in 1935 of 24 high schools and 47 middle schools. Then the pupils were calculated at 30,000, while the National Christian Council Survey figures show 154,933. The first figure may represent an attempt to calculate the secondary pupils only, and the latter those in middle schools also. There is no source of information as to the number of pupils in either the high or middle sections of schools. From the National Christian Council Survey it is learned that there are five times more non-Christian pupils than Christians in the Punjab and Bengal. In Travancore there is a majority of Christians, while in Bombay there is only 25 per cent. The United Provinces show 31 per cent., the Central Provinces 33 per cent., Madras 50 per cent., and Bihar and Orissa 80 per cent.

CHRISTIAN TEACHERS. In Bihar and Orissa, only, the number of Christian and non-Christian teachers has remained stationary. In the Central Provinces, Madras, Punjab, and the United Provinces the number of non-Christian teachers has actually declined and that of Christian teachers increased. In Bengal, while there has been an increase of 14 per cent. in Christian teachers, there has been a similar increase of non-Christian teachers. Bombay shows an increase of 37 per cent. Christian teachers and of 21 per cent. non-Christian. The Punjab presents the most remarkable increase of 29 per cent. in the number of Christian teachers compared with a decline of 7 per cent. in non-Christian. (S. K. Roy in the National Christian Council Survey.)

TRAINED TEACHERS. Mr. Roy states that "two of the provinces having the most ancient seats of learning, Bengal and Bombay, have many more untrained teachers than trained." In Bengal 32 per cent. of the teachers are trained, in Bombay 41 per cent. The Central Provinces have 50 per cent. While it is not surprising that there are twice as many trained as untrained teachers in Travancore, and five times as many in Madras, it is surprising that there are three times as many in the Punjab.

RESIDENT CHRISTIAN PUPILS. Save in those provinces where new schools have been opened there has been a general decline in the number of resident Christian pupils. This is most noticeable in Madras, Bihar and Orissa, where there is a large Christian population and not the same need of boarding schools.

FINANCE. Fee income has been steadily growing while Government grants and mission contributions have been declining. The latter have declined by 46 per cent. and 50 per cent. respectively in Travancore (British Malabar) and Bihar. In Bihar also the fee income has declined by 40 per cent. Fee income has increased in the United Provinces by 44 per cent., Bombay by 10 per cent., Madras and Central Provinces by about 6 per cent., and in Bengal by about 1.3 per cent. Government grants have decreased heavily in the Central Provinces by 27.5 per cent., and in the Punjab by 16 per cent. Mission contributions have increased only in Bombay, while Bihar and the Punjab show a decrease respectively of 50 per cent. and 40 per cent.

MIDDLE SCHOOLS. Reference has been made to the number of middle schools recorded in the Directory and doubt expressed as to the number of pupils owing to the inclusion of the primary school sections. These schools, which outnumber the high schools, are more uniformly scattered over the provinces, showing that the demand for a middle school education has been better met so far as resources permit. The proportion of Christian pupils is higher in these schools, as so many are boarding schools and girls' schools. An estimate of one third Christian pupils has been made. The last study of middle schools was made on a district basis by the National Christian Council in 1925, and showed a proportion of 47 per cent. Christian pupils.

PRIMARY SCHOOLS. The 1938 statistics show 13,938 primary schools as compared with 14,216 recorded in 1925—a decrease of 278. As indicated, these numbers are difficult to check as primary departments of high and middle schools may or may not be returned. A variation up to 700 in either figure may be possible. Even if the number had remained stationary it would show that primary education is being neglected, and the decrease in the literacy of the Christian community from 1921-31 bears this out. Pupils in 1938 numbered 681,247, and in 1925 were 564,014, an increase of 117,233. This would indicate that the schools have increased in size. This slight increase in pupils is in no way commensurate with the growth of the Christian community.

The problem of literacy is bound up largely with primary school education, and it is computed that one third of the primary pupils lapse into illiteracy.

In 1911 literacy among Christians was 16.3 per cent., and in spite of the increase in numbers of the Christian community has been steadily declining ever since. Literacy among Christians varies enormously in different provinces, and is almost twice as high in native states as in British territory. In the Punjab literacy is 5.4 per cent., and in Gwalior 51. Low percentages are explained by the growth in numbers of depressed class Christians. Increased literacy is found in small communities which have remained more or less stationary. It has been noted that in some mass movement areas only 3 per cent. of the children attended school, and that even in some older Christian groups only 50 per cent.

Ten years ago it was found that out of every 400 pupils in Christian primary schools there were only 165 Christians. On this basis there would be only 200,000 Christian pupils in them today.

Primary education in India is largely a problem of the villages. There are nearly 700,000 villages and only 142,203 primary schools, many of which are in cities. With the growth of the Christian community more and more dependence will have to be placed for primary education upon what is done by the government for the country as a whole. So far as Christian provision for the children of the community is concerned it is already far behind requirements, and tends to fall further behind.

The problem of the teacher is here the crucial one. The statistics show that there has been a decline from 77 training schools in 1925 to 67 in 1938, but an increase of students from 2,515 to 3,287. This is barely sufficient to supply the depletion in the ranks of the 32,239 teachers, and makes no provision for any further demand.

MEDICAL. The figures in the 1938 tables have been supplemented by further facts obtained in consultation with Dr. Oliver, Secretary of the Christian Medical Association of India (at Nagpur), and from the returns for the Directory of Christian Missions and Churches. The best statement obtainable from all these sources is as follows:

Year	Hospitals	Dispensaries	Beds	In-patients	Operations
1925.....	244	491 ^a	5,918	94,630	75,205
1938.....	261	510 ^a	18,022 ^b	211,553	179,070
13 yrs.....	+17	+19	+12,104	+112,923	+103,865

^a This probably includes some dispensaries in the hospitals.
^b This is for institutions which have over 10 beds. The total number is nearly 19,000.

The increase in institutions and equipment is noticeable, while the volume of work has more than doubled. There is, however, no such increase in staff as might be expected, as the following table shows:

Year	Missionaries			Nationals
	Doctors		Nurses	Doctors		Nurses	Student Nurses
	Men	Women		Men	Women
1925.....	107	183	227	136	37	537	1,000
1938.....	105	149	290	201	150	800	1,727
13 yrs.....	-2	-34	+63	+65	+113	+263	+727

The decrease in foreign doctors of 36 is not so great as was feared, and foreign nurses have increased by 63. The increase in number of beds almost leads one to think that the 1925 figures were inaccurate, yet it is borne out by the increase of in-patients and of operations. The total number of treatments was 4,866,267. This enormous volume of work is carried on by an inadequate staff which the increase of national workers does little to relieve. The Indian doctors have increased by 178 and nurses by 263. The provision for the supply of doctors and nurses also is inadequate. The three colleges have 284 medical students, of whom 238 are women. The whole question of the provision of Christian personnel calls for reconsideration. In 1925 two institutions reported 187 students, and the same two institutions now report only 138. In spite, therefore, of the doubling of the work European doctors have decreased, nurses increased: all sections of the Indian staff have increased, yet none of these increases are in proper relation to the enormous growth of the work.

LEPER WORK. This is not shown in the tables, but reference to it is made here as part of the total picture. There are 55 leper institutions in India and Ceylon. Nine are in Bombay and Madras respectively; 7 in the Central Provinces; 6 in the Punjab. Most of the leper work in India is carried on by the missions, and only a few institutions receive any government support.

TUBERCULOSIS SANATORIA. These number 10 and are located in six provinces. Half the tuberculosis work in India is done by missions, and in both treatment and training of workers it is admitted Christian institutions take the lead. These sanatoria have a foreign staff of 17 and a national staff of 45 doctors and nurses.

INSTITUTIONS. The number of institutions dealt with in these statistics is 2,528 (see also Directory for details), most of which are under the personal supervision of a missionary. The effective missionary force for organized work, as already noted, is only 3,374, and the care of these institutions constitutes a heavy burden. There does not seem to have been much devolution of the care of these various institutions upon Indian leadership. When it is remembered that the small missionary staffs are also responsible for the supervision of 14,000 Primary Schools and the care of many churches, the case for larger devolution here becomes unanswerable. If it is desired to increase the mobility of the present force of missionaries more progress will require to be made in this direction.

AGRICULTURAL SETTLEMENTS AND FARMS. These number about 80 and are scattered over all the provinces. The largest number is found in Bombay (15), the next largest in Madras (13), and the next in the Central Provinces (12).

COÖPERATIVE CREDIT SOCIETIES AND BANKS have been steadily increasing and now number about 60. Some of these are Central Banks and others simply village societies. They vary greatly in soundness, but represent a part of the effort which missions have made to meet the economic difficulties of the Christian community. Under the heading of economic activities must also be mentioned the printing presses of which there are 47 scattered through most of the provinces, but differing greatly in size and efficiency. There are 40 other industrial enterprises, which include embroidery, weaving, carpentry, lace work, needlework and other miscellaneous industries. Industrial schools of various types number 134, and are found in practically all the provinces.

PHILANTHROPIC. The present statistics show a decrease in India and Ceylon in the ten years from 153 orphanages to 69, and of other homes from 63 to 8. This, however, is not borne out by the lists for 1935 published in the Directory. 126 orphanages are recorded there, 9 Homes for Converts, 46 Homes for Women, 12 Homes for the Blind, Deaf and others, 78 social and welfare institutions, which, so far as is known, are all still being carried on. The position will be clarified in the forthcoming edition of the Directory of Churches and Missions in India, 1938-39.

LITERATURE. There are heavy responsibilities under this head not recorded in the statistics, which make serious demands on the time of the depleted missionary staff. There are 58 periodicals of all-India interest published by the various societies, and in addition 73 provincial publications in most of the principal languages. There are 14 provincial literature committees for the production of Christian literature dealing with 14 main languages.

FINANCE. The statistics show that 36 per cent. of the total cost is met from income on the field. It is difficult to assess the value of this figure and it can only be very approximately correct. The mission appropriations are $8,086,476 out of the total income of $12,560,259. The idea of self-support for the total missionary enterprise in India is still in the future.

BURMA

RANDOLPH L. HOWARD

One of the brightest occurrences of the period under review has been the entry into Burma of the Bible Churchmen's Missionary Society. The increase brought by their staff largely covers up losses in the grand total. The American Baptist Foreign Mission Society has lost over 33 per cent. of its large staff. The increase in ordained men (nationals) amounting to some 33 per cent. while the membership of the churches has increased about 75 per cent. indicates a real need. There has been a definite decrease of resident stations in the American Baptist Mission due to the decrease in personnel. Some relief has come in the Bible Churchmen's Missionary Society taking over two stations that the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society could no longer staff. Further relief has come in the indigenous leaders taking over full responsibility for the work as the Sgaw Karens of the Bassein and Rangoon fields.

In the two periods, one of 22 years (1903-25) and the other of 13 years (1925-38), there is evidence of a rapidly increasing Christian community. Each period shows an increase of about 100 per cent. This is due to the response to the Gospel message among the animistic Hill Tribes. However, in a country in which the vast majority are Buddhist Burmans, the failure to make progress among the dominant people is failure in our main objective.

With the exception of one or two kindergarten training classes, the government has taken over all Anglo-vernacular Normal Training, most of which was provided by mission schools. The Government Teachers Normal Training College in connection with the University, with higher requirements, far better equipment and splendid practice schools has been a great step in advance. However, missions have been providing such new lines as the Pyinmana Agricultural School for boys and the Home Arts Department of the Maymyo Girls' School.

The comparative figures show an increase in enrollment of about 50 per cent. in schools below high schools, in each decade. The Christian enrollment of Judson College continues to range around 60 per cent., probably the highest per cent. of any college in India and Burma. In theological training the requirements for entry have been progressively rising. The Baptist Mission has established an English department in which some college work or its equivalent is required. The Holy Cross Seminary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel Mission located near the University also carries an English course.

Mission medical service has been limited to frontier stations or hospitals such as the Ellen Mitchell Memorial Hospital in Moulmein for women and children, the S.P.G. Mission Children's Hospital in Mandalay and the Vernacular Nurses Training in Chaungwa. Dr. Buker of Kengtung is building on a basis of preventive medicine, and is training workers for dispensaries in key villages.

Since 1921 the total population has increased about 11.2 per cent. while the Christian community has increased about 28 per cent. Protestant missions have increased about 31 per cent. while Roman Catholic missions have increased 23 per cent. The Roman Catholic mission has suffered a loss of about 16 per cent. among indigenous tribes and races while the Baptist mission has gained about 30 per cent. One of the most serious aspects of the Census Report is the drop among Burman Christians from 15,381 to 11,256 between 1921-31. The reasons for this seem to indicate that it is largely a matter of method of recording rather than total loss. The spirit of nationalism has made individuals more careful how they reported themselves. That is, Chins and Karens members of Burman churches would report their real nationality. The ratio of Christians to population is as follows: Burmans, 1 to 659; Chins, 1 to 45; Indians, 1 to 33; Kachins, 1 to 10; and Karens, 1 to 5.

THE NEAR EAST

HERRICK B. YOUNG

It is more than one hundred years since American and European Protestant missionaries first entered that difficult and discouraging field—the Moslem Near East. To gain a proper perspective with which to consider missionary activity in the Near East, one must consider some of the forces that have been at play.

For years church and state were one through the greater part of this area with the Turkish Empire and the Moslem religion reaching out into every insignificant corner to exact tribute and allegiance. At the same time there was a Christian minority which was numbered within the ranks of the ancient Oriental churches, doing little to carry out Christ's great commission but rather thinking of protecting themselves from their Moslem neighbors.

With the upheaval of the Wor'd War the status quo throughout the whole Moslem world was completely changed. In the first place, modern transportation and communication facilities came to the Near East. The breakdown of Moslem customs and the freedom of women in one place resulted in similar changes in other areas. Any possibility of pan-Islam as a major force in the world picture was ended when Moslems from Turkey fought in the World War against Moslems from India. In so doing they showed that their first allegiance was to their country rather than to their religion.

At the end of the World War a restless nationalism emerged as a major factor in the life and thought of the Near East. Missionary activities in Turkey today and to a lesser degree elsewhere have suffered as a result. For instance, there are only one third as many foreign missionaries in Turkey today as there were in 1911. To be sure the new political alignments in the Near East since the World War with changed national units makes any comparison difficult. The closing of mission primary education in Iran is part of the same trend. As Near Eastern governments have become nationally conscious they have felt that foreign schools and hospitals subtly reflected on their own competence in these fields. At the same time the dramatic changes that have been taking place educationally, politically, socially, and economically in the many Near Eastern countries have shaken the inhabitants from their traditional acceptance of customs, traditions, and superstitions. The result is that millions today are groping for something to take the place of Islam in which they are beginning to lose confidence. They find that the Moslem clergymen are no longer the legal authorities, for the Koranic code of laws is being replaced by the Swiss code of laws in several countries. They find that science has revealed curious foibles and weaknesses in the age-old Moslem traditions and superstitions.

As women put aside the veil they enter new freedom without the inhibitions of centuries of segregation in harems. The family can now be approached as a unit in a way it never could before. Thus the possibility of stability on the part of the growing national churches is increased. For if a whole family decides for Christ it is much more likely to withstand pressure to return to Islam than is an individual who is being urged by his immediate family.

Figures for the indigenous church in the Near East are likely to be misleading, for often they do not distinguish between members of the Armenian, Assyrian, and Coptic Churches and converts from Islam.

There are three general divisions in the Moslem World which we must recognize:

(a) Countries like Arabia, Egypt, Syria, and Iraq have Islam as a culture, a literature, and a religion.

(b) Turkey and Iran, in their nationalistic awakening are glorying in their pre-Islamic culture and resenting a religion that was inflicted on them.

(c) India presents a different picture, for there Islam is a religion and a political party.

The static situation in those countries where Islam is a culture as well as a religion is worthy of note. We find, however, the same seething and unrest indicating similar developments even in these countries in the near future. Increasing literacy all through the Near East explains the increased emphasis on the use of Christian literature.

It is most encouraging to realize that the mission boards and agencies at work in the Moslem world are becoming increasingly aware of the challenging new opportunity that confronts them. For years evangelistic work among Moslems has been a heart-breaking endeavor. However, there is no question but that at present there are many Moslems who are secretly Christians and many others who are preparing themselves to take the final step for an out-and-out acceptance of Christianity. Those who become discouraged about missionary work among Moslems in certain bigoted and fanatical sections of the Moslem world should take courage from other sections of the Near East where great progress is being made.

One of the most heartening developments in missionary work in the Near East is the Near East Christian Council, including representatives of thirty-six foreign organizations. Christian work in the Near East today has two major tasks. The first is to bring new vision and vitality into the ancient Oriental churches which form great potential allies in bringing the good news of Christ and His salvation to that part of the world. The second major task is to bring Christ to the millions of Moslems whose homes are in the Near East.

The 1938 statistics to which this article refers are to be found in the following tables: Table I—Church on the Field, pp. 63-66; Table II—Foreign Staff, pp. 100-103; Table III—Finance, pp. 141-144; Table IV—Educational, pp. 176-178, 194, 197, 202, 205-206, 210, 211; Table V—Medical, pp. 222-224, Table VI—Philanthropic, pp. 233-234.

AFRICA

B. D. GIBSON

In comparing figures of this survey with those of previous surveys, the union of the United Free Church of Scotland with the Church of Scotland and of the Primitive, United and Wesleyan Methodists in the Methodist Missionary Society should be noted. A steady increase in the Christian Church, swelling to remarkable numbers in some cases, is noticeable in nearly every part of Africa. The continued shepherding and teaching of these growing churches will be a most urgent task for the next decade. If one could judge from the figures given one might wonder whether this task was receiving adequate at-tion now. There are some areas where an increase in the number of ordained Africans seems to be accompanied by a surprising decrease in the number of lay helpers. This may be due to a difference in classification, to the exclusion by one recorder of unpaid workers, etc., but as the figures stand the question cannot but strike the observer. In the matter of theological education, however, the difficulties of tabulation and classification are clearly seen by noting the considerable number of ordained pastors recorded in the Scottish mission field and the absence of any entry for this mission under theological or Bible-training schools. The fact is that a great deal of the training of pastors, catechists, and other workers is given in the same institution where teachers are trained, and are, therefore, not separately recorded. Furthermore, training for ordination is often given personally by the bishop or some qualified missionary in small groups informally. A special study would be required to secure any adequate idea of the various measures taken to provide the African churches with a trained and educated pastor.

TEACHER TRAINING. The figures are given as supplied by the societies—ungraded. No attempt is made to distinguish between the grades of training but the majority train teachers for schools recognized by the governments. Moreover, there are lamentable gaps where societies have not reported their work adequately.

In Sierra Leone the Union College is a new institution in the Protectorate in which the Methodist Mission, the Church Missionary Society and the United Brethren in Christ coöperate. Fourah Bay College and others train for the Colony. In the Gold Coast the Basel Mission and the Church of Scotland join in a teacher-training school. Achimota College trains teachers for other missions. In Nigeria the Church Missionary Society has not reported any of its teacher training. The Union College at Ibadan for women teachers is also omitted. (Church Missionary Society and Methodist Missionary Society.) In the Belgian Congo two large schools of the United Christian Missionary Society and the Presbyterian Church in the United States are missing. The American Baptist Mission collaborates with the British Baptists and the Svenska Missionsförbundet in the union school. In Nyasaland the Dutch Reformed Church Mission training is not recorded. The Church Missionary Society training schools in Tanganyika and Uganda are all missing.

MEDICAL COLLEGES. The two institutions thus designated by their societies do not by any means represent the total of medical education given by Protestant missions in Africa. There is no college, government or missionary, where Africans can qualify as fully trained medical men and the training of assistants of all grades is most often carried on in classes connected with a hospital. Consequently none of this very extensive training is listed in these tables.

COLLEGES. The designation is that given by the society concerned and does not correspond to an academic standard. Many others might have been included. The only college undertaking university work is Fourah Bay College in Sierra Leone (C.M.S. and M.M.S.) which is affiliated to Durham University.

GENERAL EDUCATIONAL. The figures given are those sent in by the missionary societies and doubtless include classes indispensable in pioneer missions but perhaps hardly worthy the name of "school." In British territory the government education reports give full statistics of the mission schools according to their academic grading. In non-British territory government reports do not give full statistics of Protestant mission schools but in these cases the absence of a government standard leaves the grading of the schools largely a matter of individual opinion.

There can be no doubt that schools of all sorts have multiplied rapidly since 1925 though the increase is slower in the higher grade and more expensive schools.

TROPICAL AFRICA. In French West Africa the progress of Protestant missions has been slow. The acceptance by France of the mandates for the larger part of Togo and Cameroun laid extra burdens on the French Protestants in caring for the Christian communities gathered by the Bremen and Basel missions. A number of undenominational or "Faith" missions of greater or less stability have opened work in this area in the last decade. The Methodist Mission in Dahomey and the Ivory Coast to whom has fallen the task of shepherding the converts of the prophet Harris alone show large numbers.

In Sierra Leone most societies show a slow and steady increase. The Methodist Missionary Society however shows a decrease. The union of the Methodist churches was not unanimously approved in Sierra Leone and a separatist church was the result. The local income of both the Anglican and Methodist churches seems to have dropped since 1925. Economic stringency is one cause, but in these older Christian communities one can trace many of the same symptoms which have appeared in Europe—a younger generation with a somewhat indifferent or critical attitude towards the church of their grandfathers. The number of ordained African clergy has, in most churches, increased, as has the number of lay workers. Only the Methodists show a decrease in both.

In Liberia the Christian community shows not very great increase, though figures for comparison are inadequate. American staffs have been affected by the depression, but the Protestant Episcopal Church which has increased its staff shows an apparent heavy fall in the number of its total Christian community, stations and African staff, and also in local income. The main changes in African staff are in the Protestant Episcopal Church where there is a striking decrease—from 34 ordained men in 1925 to 4.

The Gold Coast presents a more cheerful picture. The Methodist Church has been going forward rapidly and is now, with the exception of the Church Missionary Society in Nigeria, by far the largest church in West Africa. It has still a considerable income from England (apart from missionaries' salaries) but the local income is much greater than this outside contribution. The Presbyterian Church of the Gold Coast and the Ewe Church have gone far in the direction of self-government and are entirely self-supporting. Membership cannot be exactly checked because of the disturbance of the War years, during which the Scottish missionaries from Calabar carried on the work of the Basel and Bremen missions. When the Germans came back the Church of Scotland carried on in collaboration with the Basel Mission, supporting the Presbyterian Church of the Gold Coast and working closely also with the Ewe Church, which is the child of the Norddeutscher or Bremen Mission. The decrease in Bremen staff from 50 in 1911 may be partly accounted for by the division of Togoland, the larger part being now under French Mandate where the German mission work is carried on by the Paris and Methodist missions. Even so the church figures for the lesser area are nearly double those of the whole field in 1911. The Paris figures for Togo show a similar growth. The Basel mission staff has grown, and an indication of policy may be found in the increase of the number of single women from 3 to 8. Since the War the Gold Coast has enjoyed a period of great prosperity and the optimism of such a condition is reflected in the Christian churches. It is undoubtedly significant, however, that a very large proportion of the field income of the churches comes in education fees. The Anglican Church has increased its ordained African clergy from 4 in 1925 to 25 in 1938, but the number of lay workers has decreased here and in the Methodist Church. The Presbyterian and Methodist churches already had a considerable number of ordained Africans in 1925.

In Nigeria the staffs of all the missions show a steady increase but the most spectacular growth is that of the Sudan Interior Mission from 12 missionaries in 1911 to 72 in 1925 and 190 in 1938. It is not accompanied by a proportionate increase in the full members of the church or in the total Christian community, but it must be remembered that the work is in the northern province—a difficult area owing to the predominance of Islam and the consequent caution of the government attitude towards Christian missions.

The membership of the Anglican Church, already large in 1925, has been doubled since then and that of the Methodist trebled. The Qua Iboe Mission in a comparatively small field has increased its membership by nearly fivefold since 1925 and from just over 1,000 in 1911. Its field income has only doubled since 1925. In the Anglican Church local contributions have increased largely since 1925, but again hardly in proportion to the membership growth.

The Basel figures cannot be compared with previous years. In 1925 the missionaries had not yet been allowed to return after the War and the church was largely unshepherded. The figures of 1911 include part of the present French mandated territory where the Paris mission is now carrying on. The present staff is less than the total of 1911 but the numbers of Christians, in spite of the absence of effective help or supervision during nearly ten years, is now nearly treble that of the wider field in 1911.

In Cameroun the Paris Mission which has carried on the Basel work has developed rapidly, staff has increased and the church (full members) has doubled its numbers since 1925 which were more than four times those of 1911. The American Presbyterian Mission has steadily increased its full membership but the remarkable growth was between 1911 and 1925—from under 2,000 to over 29,000.

In French West Africa the Swedish Mission (Svenska Missionsförbundet) appears to be developing rapidly, but the mission works across the Belgian-French border and figures for each country are not always easily distinguishable. The Paris Mission church members are more than trebled since 1925 but the Örebro Mission seems to be making very slow progress. The Brethren church has increased from small beginnings in 1925.

In Congo a number of new missions have started work and the older established missions show steady increase in staff which now are making strides forward. A large increase in the Christian community is apparent in the growth of new missions such as the Congo Evangelistic Mission which shows an increase from some 640 communicants (1925) to 19,000 (1938), or the Southern Methodists which increased from 862 to nearly 4,000; and in the continuous development of older established missions such as the Southern Presbyterians which grew from 6,000 odd (1911) to 21,000 (1925) and 39,000 (1938), or the United Christian Missionary Society which increased from 451 full members (1911) to 8,600 (1925) and 44,800 in 1938. The financial efforts of the churches are much less remarkable, but this is no Gold Coast! The Baptist Missionary Society has from the beginning insisted on a large measure of self-support in church work.

In the Belgian Congo in 1925 only the American Presbyterians (South) and the Regions Beyond Missionary Union had ordained Africans, 2 and 3 respectively. The increase in 1938 is remarkable. The Presbyterians, even in 1925, listed a large number of African women workers and the present number is very striking. The figures for the Congo Evangelistic Mission and for the Baptist Missionary Society are also high.

In Rio Muni the American Presbyterians (North) withdrew from this field in the last decade.

In Angola the depression has affected the American staffs. The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions has lost 8 out of 42 missionaries, the Northern Methodists 7 out of 23. The Baptist Missionary Society works over the Congo-Angola border and figures are not always easily separated. The numbers given here are inadequate. Several new missions including Portuguese groups have opened work.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions works in close collaboration with the United Church of Canada but administrative changes make it difficult to trace figures back through earlier surveys. There has been a very large increase in the church connected with this joint work—that much is clear. The number of full members seems to have been multiplied 12 times or more since 1925. The absence of statistics from the Baptist Missionary Society (included with the figures for the Belgian Congo) and from the Plymouth Brethren, one of the long established missions with 63 missionaries, affects the total. The country is not a rich one and givings to the church are still small, though increasing. In 1925 the American Methodist was the only church with African ordained pastors (21).

In South-West Africa the Rhenish Mission was not withdrawn altogether during the War but its work in the northern part of the territory was handed over to the Finnish Mission and the small section over the border in Angola had to be abandoned entirely. The church has grown larger in both its sections from some 4,000 full members (1911).

SOUTH AND EASTERN AFRICA. In Bechuanaland the United Free Church of Scotland—the section which remained outside the union with the Church of Scotland in 1930—has begun work in collaboration with the London Missionary Society.

In Southern Rhodesia the figures of foreign staffs are puzzling. The Methodist, Anglican, and Swedish Church missions show an increase which seems to require explanation. The Methodist work which was formerly under the English Wesleyans has now been taken over by the South African Methodist Church. Many of the Anglican clergy serve both white and native peoples and it is therefore not easy to reckon how many should be counted in “missionary” workers.

A large increase in membership is shown by the American Methodists, the Dutch Reformed Church and notably the South African Methodist Church (fivefold increase in communicant membership). In finance, the Methodists, both South African and American, show much the greatest progress. The American Methodist congregations have increased their contribution nearly fourfold. This is evidently the continuation of a tradition for even in 1911 the sum collected locally was comparatively large.

The American Methodist Episcopal Church (North), although it had no ordained Africans in 1925, has now more than any other denomination. There were only 20 ordained Africans altogether in Southern Rhodesia 13 years ago.

In Northern Rhodesia most of the missions have steadily increased their staffs with the exception of the Paris Mission, the Brethren in Christ, and the South African Baptist Mission. The Seventh-Day Adventist community has expanded largely since 1925.

In membership most missions show slow progress, the London Missionary Society (about fivefold) and the Universities' Mission to Central Africa (nearly fourfold) and the Church of Scotland (double) being the only significant increases in communicant membership.

In 1925 the Scottish mission had one and the Wesleyan Methodist three ordained Africans, but lay workers were far more numerous. The Scottish mission for example noted 460 in 1925 instead of 28 now.

In Nyasaland two of the larger missions, the Scottish mission and the Universities' Mission to Central Africa, show an increase in staff. This church and the Scottish mission join in the Presbyterian Church of Central Africa. The Church of Scotland figures show a trebling of their communicant membership from 1925. The Universities' Mission to Central Africa figures are more than doubled from 1925, and the Seventh-Day Adventists have increased from 1,000 to 9,504 in that time. The Zambesi Industrial Mission has had almost as great increase. The sum which the United Free Church gave in 1925 has quadrupled in 1938.

In 1925 the Universities' Mission to Central Africa had 6 ordained Africans and the two Scottish missions together 11.

In Portuguese East Africa some new missions have opened work. Of particular interest to this study is the Associação Cristã Evangelica Portuguesa which is an indigenous body formed because of local circumstances with the help of an experienced Swiss missionary, not a "separatist" church. The Nyasa Mission has taken over the work of the Church of Scotland Mission in Portuguese territory. The only mission which has greatly increased its foreign staff is the International Holiness which had two missionaries in 1925 and now has 41; most of the others show a slight decrease. The communicant members show an increase in all sections except the Universities' Mission to Central Africa in the diocese of Nyasaland which was in 1925 much the largest Christian community. The difficulties of this field are such as to discourage spectacular developments, but the Free Methodist and American Methodist Episcopal Church (North) have both more than doubled their members which were 815 and 1,518 respectively in 1925. The local contributions show a large increase, where it is possible to make comparison with earlier years. In 1925 the two Anglican missions had 6 ordained Africans, the Swiss Mission 5 and the Wesleyans 3. The increase is therefore not great. Lay workers have increased. The Free Methodists even in 1925 employed a large number of women, but barely one third of the present number.

In Tanganyika comparisons are difficult, as in West Africa, owing to the dislocations due to the War. During the absence of the German missionaries the Augustana Synod held heavier responsibilities than now. The Scottish missions from Nyasaland carried on part of the work of the Moravian (Herrnhut) and Berlin missions, and have now withdrawn. The Berlin Mission has 9 fewer missionaries than in 1911, the Moravian Mission (English and German branches together) has 12 less but the others have increased their number, Leipzig by 5 and Bethel by 33. The Diocese of Central Tanganyika has been transferred to the Australian branch of the Church Missionary Society which has brought new resources to the work, having more than doubled the European missionary staff. The Universities' Mission to Central Africa (Dioceses of Zanzibar and Masasi) have also more than doubled their staffs, and their churches have grown. The Central Tanganyika numbers were not great in 1925 and the members have more than doubled and the total Christian community almost trebled. The other two dioceses have more than doubled their already considerable memberships and the community is about three-and-a-half times its 1925 numbers. The three German missions and the Moravians have vastly increased their Christian communities and membership since 1911. The Neukirchen Mission had to make a fresh beginning in a difficult area and has made only slow progress as yet.

In 1925 only the Anglicans had ordained Africans—Church Missionary Society, 4, Universities' Mission to Central Africa, 18.

In Kenya the Church Missionary Society, Church of Scotland and Methodist Missionary Society have all increased their staffs in the last decade by 8, 10 and 13 respectively. The union of the three Methodist churches opened new resources to this rather small mission among a difficult people. The numbers of full members show a larger increase in the last decade than in the previous period. The Church Missionary Society numbers have increased over fourfold since 1925. The Church of Scotland figures have increased in almost the same proportion in spite of a controversy, which threatened to become very serious, between the missionaries and a section of the church over certain native rites. The Seventh-Day Adventists community has grown from a small body in 1925 (300 members) to considerable dimensions. The Church of God and the American Friends Mission have shown an even greater development. The Neukirchen Mission had a small church in 1911 and the absence of the missionaries as a result of the War gave it a serious set-back in spite of some care from the neighboring Methodists, nevertheless the present numbers are more than double the pre-War figure. The Africa Inland Mission membership in 1925 was second in number only to that of the Church Missionary Society.

In 1925 the Church Missionary Society had 9 African clergy and 32 women and the United Methodist Mission one ordained African and two women. The numbers of lay workers were considerably larger than in 1925.

In Uganda the Church of England diocese was divided in 1926 into Uganda and the Upper Nile which latter included until 1936 a section of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan. The figures of 1938 may therefore include some outside the actual political boundary. The staff has been increased since 1925 having added 32; 56 single women are now reported for the first time. The membership has doubled, no small matter when the 1925 total community was 145,000. The Seventh-Day Adventists have only made a beginning and the Africa Inland Mission is also a small one comparatively. Already in 1925 there were 70 ordained Africans in Uganda and 250 African women workers.

The 1938 statistics to which this article refers are to be found in the following tables: Table I—Church on the Field, pp. 66-74; Table II—Foreign Staff, pp. 103-112; Table III—Finance, pp. 144-151; Table IV—Educational, pp. 178-186, 194, 197-199, 202-203, 206-207, 210, 211; Table V—Medical, pp. 224-228; Table VI—Philanthropic, p. 234.

SOUTH AFRICA

KENNETH G. GRUBB

The complications of the racial situation make the interpretation of all South African statistics unusually difficult, and statistics of religious work are no exception. However, some conclusions can be profitably drawn.

Missionary staff shows a decrease in many organizations. Often this decrease is more apparent than real. In the case of the Dutch Reformed missions and mission churches, it is a statistical difficulty and is not related to the real situation. Underlying the general decline of staff are, however, two assumptions which have undoubtedly influenced this question. The first is, that if, owing to financial stringency, it is necessary for missions to reduce their staff, South Africa should be among the first of her foreign fields to suffer, owing to the presence of strong European churches in the field. The second is the complementary assumption that it is the duty of this European community to evangelize the native people, which is undoubtedly being done, but statistical interpretation of the process is difficult. Many clergy and ministers in the Church of the Province of South Africa, Methodist, Presbyterian and other churches, share double duties, mainly pastoral among European Christians, mainly supervisory in regard to the evangelization of natives, and such men cannot always be classified as missionaries. These considerations are, for example, behind the apparent drop in the number of missionaries of the Presbyterian Church of South Africa. Some of the German missions, for a similar reason, have not suffered in staff quite so severely as elsewhere, as they maintain close connection with the religious life of the local German communities and of South Africa generally; and where they have lost staff the corresponding responsibility has sometimes been transferred; elsewhere an example of this is the Rhenish Mission which has handed over several churches to the Dutch Reformed (Cape Mission) Church.

The Christian Church as a whole reveals steady growth. The three leading churches, reckoned by the size of the native Christian community, are the Methodist, Church of the Province of South Africa (Anglican Communion), and the Dutch Reformed Mission Church. Each of these bodies has roots in South African European church life, particularly the Dutch Reformed Church; and they therefore bear large responsibilities for developing their work even further. Since the last collection of world statistics, a notable event has taken place in the Methodist Church. On 1st January, 1931, after negotiations lasting twenty years, the Wesleyan Methodist Church of South Africa, the Transvaal and Swaziland district of the Wesleyan Methodist Church of Great Britain, and the Primitive Methodist Mission in the Union of South Africa became the Methodist Church of South Africa.

Many conclusions which are, perhaps, implicit in the table of church statistics can only be inferred indirectly from it. In some churches, notably the Church of the Province of South Africa, a common roll of communicants is kept with no distinction of race, and a certain ambiguity attaches to the statistics of membership. In other organizations the membership is not native, but colored (of mixed races) and does not so much represent the fruit of direct mission work among non-Christians, as the cultivation of a people now wholly Christian in name. This is true of the Dutch Reformed (Cape) Mission Church in contrast with the Transvaal and Orange Free State churches which are native mission churches. The work of certain missions, such as the Rhenish Mission and Moravian (Herrnhut) Missions (in part), has been among the colored people.

The evidence of the figures shows that there is hardly any profitable sphere for the entry of new missions into South Africa, but that there is real need for strengthening both the existing missions and the South African European churches so as to accept increased evangelistic responsibility.

That growth, as revealed in the statistics, has not been more rapid must be put down to three causes. Relations between black and white in South Africa have not been such as to inspire confidence among the former in the leadership and good faith of the latter. The controversy over the native question inevitably absorbs the time of missionaries and distracts them from their work. Finally, the racial background has led to important secessions from the recognized churches and the formation of separatist churches; members of the last are, of course, only lost to the statistics of the organized bodies.

In the Bechuanaland Protectorate one society returns a decrease in the Christian community, which is offset by a remarkable increase in another society. But these fluctuations are more apparent than real. The church has increased in Basutoland, and this is due partly to the previous care of the leading missions there, the Société des Missions Evangéliques, in the preparation of native pastors and evangelists and in placing increased responsibility on the church. The financial difficulties of the mission were, therefore, more easily overcome. Of the three Protectorates, Swaziland is still that where least Christian progress has been made in spite of the number of missions there.

The enrollment figures for elementary schools show considerable increase since 1925. The responsibility which missions bear in this field is already large, as direct State education is only in its infancy. A more generous official policy in regard to the funds available for native education would, however, enable the administration to assist missions still further.

The statistics do not fully reveal the heavy burden of teacher training which the churches and missions have assumed, and which, today, probably represent their most important contribution to native education; and they can only hint at the steadily graded system of higher education, culminating in the native university of Fort Hare, the fruit of collaboration between government and missions.

Few deductions can be drawn in regard to theological education and Bible schools by comparison with previous tables. The existing provision is in approximate proportion to the needs of the church.

The social field is an important one for missions in South Africa, but, although many institutions, such as orphanages, exist, it is not always possible to reveal their work statistically. The relations between black and white render this work of great importance, and increasing attention is being given to it, especially in the gold mining region of the Rand, where a native population of about a million can be found in a relatively small urbanized area.

Since 1925 there has also been a notable increase in the work of medical missions. This has taken various forms. Health centers under native nurses have been instituted by the Methodist Church and have proved a success. Clinics under European nurses have been extended, and, on the Rand, are conducted in connection with general social activity. But two recent steps are of undoubted importance for the future. It has become possible to carry on the training of native nurses on a much larger scale than hitherto and several mission hospitals have recently qualified for government grants for this purpose. Secondly, a generous donation from the Chamber of Mines has rendered possible the education of native medical aides, which is now being undertaken at Fort Hare.

The 1938 statistics to which this article refers are to be found in the following tables: Table I—Church on the Field, pp. 70-71; Table II—Foreign Staff, pp. 108-109; Table III—Finance, p. 148; Table IV—Educational, pp. 182-183, 194, 198, 202, 206, 210; Table V—Medical, p. 226; Table VI—Philanthropic, p. 234.

MADAGASCAR

WILLIAM EVANS

During the last decade much good and steady work has been done by the Protestant missions in Madagascar, and a certain amount of progress made in practically every department of the work. Hundreds of new "causes" have been established among the out-lying tribes, and several elementary schools opened, some of which today are in a flourishing condition. Others, unhappily, are stagnant and are in danger of becoming defunct, owing to the lack of adequate supervision and teaching. The decreased number of missionaries cannot possibly give them the help they need and the missions cannot financially provide for them.

In the chief centers, considerable thought has been given to higher education. In these schools thousands of youths, boys and girls, are trained under Christian influence and teaching for their future careers. For the more intelligent young men who desire more advanced education, there is a united school in the capital under the management of the Intermissionary Committee, towards the support of which the six missions (with their respective churches) represented on the Committee contribute pro rata. This is a move in the right direction, but much more of this kind of union work is badly needed.

The work of evangelization is seriously hampered by government regulations and restrictions. While it must be admitted that there has been a great improvement in the attitude of government officials towards Christian missions, these restrictions still impede the work of the missions, particularly in new territories. Open air services are strictly forbidden and no religious meeting may be conducted except in a building officially authorized for the purpose. Similarly, no school, however elementary the teaching may be, can be held in an unauthorized building; even the teaching of reading in a place of worship is illegal. To procure the required authorization for a church building, a large number of the adult inhabitants of the villages concerned must first be found willing to make and sign a petition to the government, and a favorable reply, if any, may not be received for months. All this makes the work more difficult and progress much slower than it was thirty years and more ago.

The question of self-support and, ultimately, of self-government has constantly been held before the churches, and great advance has been made towards the former during the last decade. Most of the missions have been relieved of considerable financial responsibilities and in several of the older centers and districts, complete financial self-support has already been attained. In the central province of Imerina, for instance, the churches of the London Missionary Society and of the French Protestant Mission are responsible for all the running expenses of the work, including the schools and colleges, together with other institutions. The leaders and representatives of the churches have a strong voice in the allocation of the funds raised and also in the general administration of the whole work. Self-administration or government, however, is yet a long way off even among the stronger and more enlightened churches. The great need of the churches is more intelligent and trained leaders, men of vision and of a high conception of the Christian ministry. When the few present leaders have passed away, the work will be seriously handicapped unless the missions can, as in former years, attract a better type of student to our colleges for training. With the advance of European civilization and the consequent higher standard of living, the vast majority of the most suitable young men feel forced to choose more lucrative professions. This question is of vital importance to the future of the churches, and demands serious thought and prayer.

All the churches attached to the London Missionary Society, Norske Misjonsselskap, Friends Service Council, Norwegian Lutheran Church of America, Irish Baptist Foreign Mission and Société des Missions Evangéliques de Paris are now united under one comprehensive name: "The Malagasy Protestant Church." This does not mean one organic union, but it is a great step forward, for instead of the old unchristian sectarian spirit that prevailed in the past and did so much harm, there is now an interchange of communion, and of church membership by transfer.

THE SOUTH PACIFIC

JOHN W. BURTON

The area under review consists of all the groups of islands in the Pacific Ocean south of the Equator, with the exception of that portion of New Guinea occupied by the Dutch which appropriately is considered in another division. The statistics also take into account the Aboriginal population of Australia and the Maori population of New Zealand.

Considerable difficulty has been experienced in interpreting the figures as they appear successively in The Atlas of Protestant Missions, 1903, The World Atlas of Christian Missions, 1911, The World Missionary Atlas, 1925, and in the present Statistical Survey (1938). In order to make a fair comparison in this article some returns have been omitted, and, where obvious gaps occurred, estimates have been included.

It will be seen that in a little over the span of a single generation, there has been remarkable missionary progress in the South Pacific. In these thirty-two years there have been striking increases of foreign staff, of indigenous church-workers, of communicants and of adherents, as the following figures will show:

EUROPEAN STAFF
(a) Ordained.....	93	263
(b) Laymen.....	23	144
(c) Women Workers (excluding wives).....	10	207
NATIVE STAFF.....	1,456	3,791
COMMUNICANTS.....	71,224	174,932
ADHERENTS.....	178,058	475,439

The increase in ordained foreign staff might have been expected with the growth of missionary interest, especially in Australia; but the much larger increase in the lay staff calls for some explanation. This is largely accounted for by the new emphasis that has necessarily been placed upon educational, medical, and philanthropic activities throughout the mission field, and these laymen and laywomen are mainly specialized workers. As "heathenism" recedes, there grows up a demand for education, with the result that thousands of mission schools, scores of colleges and technical institutions many of them of high quality, have been organized during the past thirty years. Medical work, with particular emphasis upon child welfare, has been necessitated by the serious decline in population in some areas, now for the most part happily arrested; while new social conditions have created a need for children's homes and other institutions. In all this the missions have been pioneers, but today much of the work is now being supplemented by government activity; and inevitably in many of these fields the missions will be allowed to retire with an honorable record of service.

The relative increase of communicants when compared with that of adherents suggests that the church on the mission field is consolidating its gains; while the large increase of adherents indicates that "heathenism" is being rapidly overcome. The Eastern Pacific (apart from the Asiatics there) is wholly evangelized, with fully organized churches; while much of the Western Pacific is still in grips with the forces of darkness. Within a few years the evangelization of the entire South Pacific will be complete, and the people nominally Christian. Then will come the hour of opportunity—and of danger. The task of evangelization is much easier than the task of education and of development in Christian life and conduct.

It is sometimes suggested that in evangelized areas the European staff might be reduced, and the younger churches left to carry on the work. This might be possible if the native people could be ring-fenced and kept apart; for the greatest danger to their moral and spiritual life is the evil side of Western civilization which ever obtrudes itself. This intrusion of an alien and unassimilable culture is the major problem of the Pacific. There is too, in some parts, the Asiatic element which brings special temptations and strange unrest to native peoples. The younger churches feel that without the support of the European missionary they are unable to withstand this impact which has no precedent in their past experience.

In Fiji, for example, thirty odd years ago the European population was 2,459 and the Indian population 17,105; today the Europeans number 4,028 and the Indians 85,002. The Fijian population declined from 94,397 in 1901 to 84,475 in 1921; but since then there has been a considerable increase and the population now stands at 97,651. This admixture of races provides the stage for a most arresting drama which may, so far as the Fijians are concerned, turn to tragedy unless we give them the help and support they need at this juncture.

Another problem that confronts the missions throughout the Pacific is that of the part-European population (usually, though erroneously, referred to as half-castes). Their number is increasing rapidly. In Fiji, for example, they have grown from 1,516 in 1901 to 4,574 in 1936. On the whole they form a good element in the population, but they are acutely sensitive and not happy with either one race or the other. The Roman Catholics have been so far more successful than the Protestants in dealing with the problem, but efforts are being made by the Protestant missions to do much more for this unfortunate but deserving people.

The darkest shadow in the Pacific is regrettably in the professedly Christian continent of Australia. Our treatment of the Aborigines is a record of disgrace that only long years of reparation and devotion can erase. The once large and healthy population, under our callous neglect and often brutal treatment, has dwindled into a mere 75,000. We have three classes left—each with its own needs and difficulties—(a) the wild and untamed nomads of North and Central Australia, (b) the contaminated Aborigines in contact with the European community, and (c) the part-Aborigines—a strange and various mixture and intermixture of Europeans, Asiatics, Malays, and Aborigines. It is to this problem and responsibility that Australia must address herself and we are thankful to report signs of a stirring of conscience among our politicians and people.

Another outstanding feature is the growth and development of the younger churches. In the Eastern Pacific nearly all the churches are organized and are responsible for all the expenses of maintaining the work, apart from the salaries and allowances of European workers. This movement has spread to the Western Pacific and churches in New Britain and in Papua are making heroic attempts to be entirely independent of financial support from the home church. This statement applies to nearly all the Protestant missions.

The missionary fervor of the younger churches remains unabated. Year after year volunteers stream from the south-eastern Pacific—Tonga, Samoa, Cook Islands, Fiji—to the north-western Pacific—Solomon Islands, Papua, New Guinea, and even to the Aborigines in North Australia.

The main weakness of the younger churches as they face these difficult and changing times is the comparatively low level of the education of its ministry. The young layman who is a certificated teacher, a native medical practitioner, or a trained artisan is culturally superior to the rank and file of the native ministry. Hence there is a movement among the ministers themselves to insist upon fuller training. It is being demanded that a much higher entrance standard be set up, and that the training be more thorough. It is suggested that men of outstanding ability shall be sent to Australia for education in theological colleges. We have discovered that these young men in the New Pacific have mental powers we scarcely suspected. One Fijian is a Bachelor of Laws of Oxford, a young Tongan is in his second year Arts at the Sydney University, and a young Tongan minister by private study obtained his Licentiate of Theology at the Melbourne School of Divinity. Hundreds of these young Islanders have been trained as school teachers, medical practitioners, and government officers and have proved themselves worthy of the confidence placed in them.

In a sentence, we believe that missionary progress in the South Pacific is vastly encouraging and of a healthy character, and we face the future—dark and challenging as it is in some aspects—with the sure confidence that the grace of God which lifted the people from barbarity and ignorance will lead them into true knowledge and into a richer experience of the Christian life.

LATIN AMERICA

WEBSTER E. BROWNING

In this chapter, reference is made only to continental Latin America, which includes Mexico, the six Republics of Central America and the ten Republics of South America. The three Guianas and British Honduras are omitted, as foreign colonies, and the three Republics—Cuba, Haiti and Santo Domingo—and the other islands of the West Indies, are to be studied in another chapter.

FOREIGN STAFF. In making a study of the statistics of foreign workers for 1903, 1911, 1925 and 1938, we arrive at a somewhat unexpected result. Probably, it might reasonably be inferred that, due to the depression of the past ten years, and in view of sudden and drastic reductions in foreign personnel, the statistics would show a very considerable decrease in the number of foreign missionaries on the field. This inference is undoubtedly true in regard to the principal boards concerned, in certain countries. Nevertheless, the statistics of the foreign staff, for a third of a century, are as under:

	1903	1911	1925	1938
Mexico.....	210	294	280	205
Central America.....	102	131	269	266
South America.....	682	698	1,558	1,681
Totals.....	994	1,123	2,107	2,152

The figures show that, in the last thirteen years, instead of the expected decrease in the total number of foreign workers, there has been a very slight increase.

It is interesting, however, to note that the majority of the large force of evangelical workers now in Latin America, especially in South America, is no longer sustained by the major boards of North America. Taking into account the Methodists, Presbyterians, and Baptists, all these both North and South, the United Christian Missionary Society, and the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, which are the largest North American boards functioning in Latin America, we find that they have had in the indicated years combined totals as follows:

	1903	1911	1925	1938
Mexico.....	137	194	220	101
Central America.....	4	8	39	45
South America.....	236	228	561	442
Totals.....	377	430	820	588

Consequently, the present maintenance of a large foreign force in Latin America is undoubtedly due to the presence of a considerable number of smaller and newer groups, most of them independent of direct control from the homeland, although some of them claim interdenominational character. Many of them, because of the reduced and always uncertain budget on which they are compelled to operate, are of an ephemeral nature, and, although they may temporarily swell the reported number of workers, their permanent contribution to the advance of evangelical Christianity is, unfortunately, of but comparatively small import. Furthermore, many of these independent groups, as well as individual independent missionaries, make no report of their numbers or activities, and, hence, are not included in the above tables. Could their exact numbers be determined, the total of foreign workers now in Latin America would be very considerably increased.

The tendency of the larger mission boards seems to be toward a decrease rather than an increase in the number of their workers, and the maintenance of the present number, as well as any future increase, seem to lie in the hands of the smaller, generally independent, and, as a rule, militantly conservative groups.

EDUCATION. A study of the educational situation of the various missions reveals the fact that, in South America at least, greater and probably more permanent advance has been made than in any other department of evangelical activity. The following statistics show the growth of the schools:¹

*Partial returns only.

For an understanding of these statistics, as compared with those which come from certain other countries, it must be remembered that in Latin America there are no "colleges," as we understand the term. The bachelor's degree, which is merely a sine qua non for admission into professional courses of the university, is granted at the termination of the secondary or high school course, which, in Latin America, corresponds to the program of the Lycée in France or the Gymnasium in Germany. The cultural studies of the "college," which is exclusively an American institution, are crowded into the secondary programs and those of the University, the professional courses being lengthened, for the purpose, to six or more years. Therefore, no "colleges" appear in the statistics of Latin America.

During the past twenty years, the educational activities of the evangelical missions have become more apparent as a real contribution to the school work in each Republic. A number of small primary schools, no longer needed, have disappeared from the scene, but others have been fully developed and now function in modern buildings and amid attractive settings. In any study of the work of evangelical education in Latin America, it would be well to have in mind a few of the best equipped institutions, such as the Mackenzie College, Bennet College, Gammon Institute, and perhaps a dozen others of almost equal standing in Brazil; Crandon Institute for girls in Montevideo; Ward College in Buenos Aires; the International College in Paraguay; Santiago College and the "Instituto Inglés" in Santiago, Chile; the American College in La Paz, Bolivia; the American College for Girls in Lima, Peru; and the American colleges in Bogotá and Barranquilla, Colombia. In Mexico education in general has been taken over by the government, but a considerable number of schools still figure in our statistics. A number of institutions in other countries have also become nationalized, or have organized under their own boards of trustees, and, accordingly, do not report their statistics to the mission boards by which they were originally organized. Among such, one could mention Mackenzie College, São Paulo, Brazil, with almost 2,000 students, originally organized by the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., but which now works under a local council and a Board of Trustees in New York City, incorporated by the University of the State of New York.

THEOLOGICAL TRAINING. The statistics for "Theological, Normal Schools, and Training Classes" are generally so blended that it is quite impossible to discover the exact number of students in any one of the three divisions.

In the latest statistics, only four Republics are listed as providing instruction in what may be ranked as well-organized theological seminaries—namely, Argentina, Brazil, Mexico, and Salvador, and it is probable that these countries do contain the majority of students under full theological training in Latin America, with a total reported of 178. No doubt there are a great many in secondary schools whose ultimate goal is the ministry, and, should they be counted, especially in Brazil, the number would be greatly increased. Nevertheless in general, in all Latin America outside of Brazil, it is admitted that there has been a considerable falling off in recent years in the number of candidates for the ministry.

The statistics for 1938 indicate a considerable increase in the number of Bible Training Schools. This increase is probably due to the fact that for the first time in the statistical tables, these institutions are segregated from those of a similar nature, and stand out by themselves. It must also be taken into consideration that many of the small independent groups mentioned elsewhere do not aspire to theological seminaries, but class their "schools of the prophets" as Biblical Institutes, or Bible Training Schools. Unfortunately, for those who wish exact statistics, these small groups often include, in the figures given for those who are under training, all who attend their denominational meetings. The writer of these lines personally knows of one such group which is listed as having forty students in its "Bible Training School." As a matter of fact, this group never had more than that number of believers in the single locality in which it formerly actuated, and, like a good many others of this ephemeral character, has now probably disappeared from the scene.

At this time, when the evangelical churches of all denominations in Latin America are passing through a period of transition incident to the withdrawal of a large part of the missionary personnel and a diminution in the amount of financial backing, and when there seems to be an unusual demand for the nationalization of support and leadership, a careful study of the real state of affairs reveals an ominous situation both in regard to the number and intellectual preparation of the present ministry and the steps that are being taken to provide for the future. There is, of course, a sharp difference of opinion among missionaries of the various groups as to the necessity of a cultured ministry. But the lack of students for the ministry, regardless of pre-theological preparation, is almost unanimous.

THE CHURCH. The growth of the national churches in Latin America has been constant and steady. No marked revival has swept the field—as in Cameroun, West Africa, where, in 1937, there were some 25,000 new inquirers—but there has been a constant growing and healthy interest in the spiritual life, and the influence of the evangelical movement in every community runs far beyond its numerical importance. Perhaps one of the greatest proofs of its usefulness in Latin America is the reflex influence it has exercised on the dominant church, which, because of its contact with evangelical Christianity, is today far superior, in every way, to what it was at the beginning of the century. Among the thinking classes it is no longer a mark of inferior social standing to be a member of an evangelical church, but rather, a proof of superior culture and a finer moral sense, especially in regard to civic responsibilities. There is slight likelihood that the evangelical churches will ever form more than a comparatively small numerical minority among the peoples of Latin America; but this minority will, or should, like Socrates' "gad-fly on a noble steed," continually incite the dominant majority to greater activity, especially toward a higher spiritual life.

For Mexico, in 1903, the annals of evangelical work and workers were short and simple. The combined evangelical forces had 547 native workers, in 98 stations and 434 out-stations, 20,769 communicant members and 17,000 adherents. In 1911 there were 529 native workers, in 75 principal stations and 520 out-stations, these figures denoting but slight change during eight years. But the total number of native Christians, including baptized persons and adherents, had advanced to 92,156. In 1925 there were 680 on the native staff, working in 272 organized churches and in 298 chapels and other places of worship, and the total of the Christian community is set down as 32,499, this figure based on "partial returns only." The statistics for 1938 are more complete and show 472 organized churches, with 565 other places of worship, with a total of 55,652 baptized members and others under instruction.

In all Central America, in 1903, there were but 4,969 communicant members in the evangelical churches, with 6,454 under instruction. In 1911 there were 304 ordained and unordained native workers, in 51 stations and 149 out-stations, with 33,687 native Christian adherents. In 1925 the numbers reported were 416 native workers, in 213 organized churches, and 512 chapels, with 30,082 baptized Christians. And for 1938 the statistics are as follows: organized churches 330, with 661 other places of worship, a native force of 577, and a total evangelical community of 79,493.

In South America, in 1903, there were 1,087 native workers, in 575 stations and out-stations, with 37,843 communicants and 55,173 adherents. In 1911 the number of native workers was reported to have fallen to 838, in 131 stations and 432 out-stations, with a total evangelical communion of 156,397. In 1925 there were 1,459 native workers in 1,095 organized churches and 2,008 out-stations, with 118,614 baptized members in the churches and 17,567 under instruction. In 1938 in all South America there were, according to the statistical tables, 2,434 native workers, with 2,948 organized churches, 4,261 other preaching places, a total baptized member list of 341,628 with 63,977 others under instruction.

It is understood that the above figures refer only to national churches. Did they include the foreign communities, such as the strong German colonies in southern Brazil and southern Chile, or the American, Anglican and Scottish communities in various Republics, especially Argentina, the number would be at least doubled.

MEDICAL WORK. Medical work by evangelical missionaries in Latin America has never received the attention given it in other countries, especially in the Far East. Two or three reasons may be given.

In the first place, each of these western republics has its own extensive and generally well organized university system, in which there is always included a medical faculty which sends out each year a considerable number of new physicians.

Then, in the second place, there is a somewhat recent development of an intense national spirit which more and more precludes the entrance of foreign practitioners, not only in medicine, but also in all other professions. Consequently, no medical school has been established by evangelical forces, and the most recent records (1925) show but three training schools for nurses—one in Mexico, one in Brazil and the third in Guatemala.

According to the statistics before us, in 1903 there were 12 foreign doctors in 4 hospitals in Mexico, 1 doctor and 1 hospital in Central America, and 7 doctors in South America; a total of 20 doctors and 5 hospitals.

Strange to say, statistics for 1911 do not mention any doctor or nurse, but the number of hospitals had remained the same.

In 1925 there were 23 doctors, 4 of them in Central America and 6 in South America. Nurses for the first time appear this year in the statistics, 5 in Mexico, 4 of them in Central America and 14 in South America. There were 6 hospitals in Mexico, 2 in Central America and 6 in South America, a total of 14 and, in addition, 54 clinics or dispensaries were reported, 28 of them in South America, 5 in Central America and 21 in Mexico.

In 1938, Mexico reported 8 doctors and 14 nurses, Central America 3 doctors and 16 nurses, South America 20 doctors and 39 nurses, a total of 31 doctors and 69 nurses. Thirteen hospitals are reported: 3 in Mexico, 3 in Central America and 7 in South America. There is a total of 28 dispensaries, 6 being in Mexico, 4 in Central America and 18 in South America.

Medical work, by missionaries or other foreigners, is destined to disappear soon from Latin America, because of the reasons given above. It is now exceedingly difficult, practically impossible, for any foreign doctor to meet the rigid requirements of the local medical faculty in order to secure the revalidation of a foreign diploma, which is a sine qua non for the practice of the profession. Although the foreigner may declare, and prove, that it is his intention to work in the far interior of the continent, even among the most neglected Indians, where no other doctor is or ever has been located, he will, nevertheless, find all sorts of difficulties put in his way, and difficult examinations in a strange tongue will make his entrance into the field impossible.

PHILANTHROPY. In the maintenance of philanthropic institutions, also, the evangelical missions have done but little, in an official sense, in Latin America. Unlike the countries of the Far East, the Hispanic-American republics have long had their own orphanages and asylums of various classes, supported by state or municipal grants. The dominant church has also been active in this respect, although it has never lost sight of its own interests in this, as in other work. The evangelical churches have been weak, both numerically and financially, and, moreover, as a rule, have not felt called to enter the field of philanthropic activity, in view of the fact that it was already occupied, in a sense, by the groups mentioned above.

However, something has been and is being done. In 1911, one orphanage was reported in all Latin America. This was in Argentina, was sustained by the Methodist Episcopal Church, and had 10 inmates. In 1925, Mexico reported 2 orphanages, with a total of 32 inmates. In Central America, in the same year, there were 4 orphanages with 85 inmates, and, in all South America, there were 8 orphanages, with 239 inmates. In 1938, in Mexico, there were 3 orphanages, with 148 inmates. But one was reported from Guatemala, Central America, with 41 inmates, and South America had 12 orphanages with 244 inmates.

No evangelical mission has established a leper asylum, nor a home for untainted children of lepers, nor is there any institution for blind and deaf under evangelical control. Evangelicals have, however, done much to alleviate the sufferings of lepers in various countries, especially in Brazil, Argentina and Paraguay, but have generally worked through State institutions, or with funds raised on the field or generously given by the American Mission to Lepers. With probably 100,000 lepers in South America alone, there is among them a great field for philanthropic service which the missions have not as yet been able to enter.

FINANCE. The inclusion of the financial statement in the statistics of foreign missions is a recent innovation. Before 1938 no place in published statistics was given to a record of the costs involved in carrying forward the missionary program. Consequently, our records are limited to that date, and no comparison can be made with former years.

In Mexico, where there were 4 younger churches, 2 Mexican societies and 16 North American societies, the total amount received from abroad in 1938 was $312,311, while the various churches raised on the field a total of $154,091.

In the six republics of Central America a total of $230,268 is recorded as received from abroad, and $163,853 was raised on the field. Although this second amount is still less than the former, it speaks well for the evangelical churches in Central America, since their members are generally of the poorer class, and such generous giving must have signified no little self-sacrifice. The only one of the six Central American republics which report receipts on the field, in excess of the amount received from abroad, is Panama, which received $25,627 and raised $47,692. However, the favorable showing in this was undoubtedly due to the presence on the Isthmus of many foreigners, especially in the Canal Zone, which is included in the statistics. The national church itself in Panama is one of the least strong of all those in Central America.

To South America, according to the statistics published for 1938, went $1,319,160, but $1,664,991 was raised on the field. The countries of South America, which gave more than they received from abroad, in support of national evangelical work, were Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Peru, and Uruguay. Brazil reported $574,463 sent into the country from abroad, but raised $817,217 in support of its work. It is here fitting also to say that most of the money that goes into Brazil, as into other countries of South America, is exclusively for the payment of the salaries of missionaries and their work budget. In most of these countries, the work of the missionary is no longer that of acting as pastor of a local church, but in pioneering on the frontier, or caring for institutional work in cities. The churches, as such, are learning to stand alone financially.

Were statistics available for former years, they would undoubtedly show a much larger amount of money received from abroad and a correspondingly less amount raised on the field. But the financial crisis throughout the world, which suddenly and tragically curtailed the amount of money available for foreign missions, threw the national churches on their own resources, and did much to develop self-support.

The 1938 statistics to which this article refers are to be found in the following tables: Table I—Church on the Field, pp. 76-77, 79-82; Table II—Foreign Staff, pp. 114-115, 118-121; Table III—Finance, pp. 153-154, 157-159; Table IV—Educational, pp. 187-188, 190-192, 194, 199-200, 203, 207-208, 210; Table V—Medical, pp. 229-230; Table VI—Philanthropic, p. 235.

THE WEST INDIES

CHARLES S. DETWEILER

The West Indian Islands are divided into British, French, and Dutch West Indies, the American possessions of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, and the independent Republics of Cuba, Santo Domingo, and Haiti. The Dutch West Indies are the smallest of all these divisions and no statistics are furnished for them. The French West Indies consist of two large islands, Guadeloupe and Martinique, and on these islands there are no Protestant missions. For the purpose of this survey, the three islands, Cuba, Puerto Rico, and Hispaniola—the latter containing two nations, the Dominican Republic and Haiti—are grouped together.

The population of the West Indies is estimated to be twelve million, of which about ten million are found in the Spanish- and French-speaking islands. A population of two million is, roughly speaking, Protestant, belonging to British, Dutch, and former Danish colonies. The population, of which the far larger part is nominally Roman Catholic, is divided among the following islands: Cuba, 4,000,000; Puerto Rico, 1,500,000; and the Dominican Republic, 1,500,000; or a total of 7,000,000 who speak Spanish; and Haiti, 2,500,000; Guadeloupe 210,000; and Martinique 190,000; or a total of 2,900,000 who speak French. All of these islands, with the exception of Cuba and that part of Hispaniola occupied by the Dominican Republic, are densely populated, ranging from two hundred and fourteen to the square mile in Jamaica to one thousand two hundred to the square mile in Barbados. Where agriculture is conducted on a large scale by corporations, as in Puerto Rico and Jamaica, the governments are confronted with the problem of overpopulation.

The three islands of Puerto Rico, Hispaniola, and Cuba grouped together have registered the greatest advances of any group in the past twenty-five years. Ninety-five ordained national pastors were reported for these islands in 1911, 204 in 1925, and 278 in 1938. This increase corresponds with the number of churches which were, respectively, 242, 482, and 638. In the same period of time the communicants increased from 23,039 in 1911 to 66,152 in 1938; and the offerings for church expenses increased from $27,897 to $209,885. It is significant that at the time the number of ordained foreign missionaries decreased from 114 to 69, indicating that the evangelical church was taking root in the soil and becoming less and less of a foreign institution. There was an increase in elementary schools; 64 in 1911, 83 in 1925, and 169 in 1938. However, it is to be noted that most of the increase in schools took place not in Cuba and Puerto Rico, but in the Republics of Santo Domingo and Haiti of the island of Hispaniola. High schools and boarding schools increased from 12 to 13, and seminaries decreased from 4 to 3. This decrease in the number of seminaries means that the three denominations in Puerto Rico that maintained separate seminaries combined their forces for the formation of one union seminary. There has been also a steady increase in medical work. In 1911 there were two hospitals in this area. In 1925 and 1938 there were four, a gain of one in Puerto Rico and one in the Dominican Republic. The dispensaries decreased from 10 in 1925 to 9 in 1938. The number of in-patients increased from 1,617 in 1925 to 16,227 in 1938.

In Jamaica there was a similar decrease in the number of ordained foreign missionaries from 179 in 1911 to 79 in 1938, and an increase in the number of ordained national pastors from 108 in 1911 to 223 in 1938. The membership (communicants), however, has suffered a notable decline from 138,000 in 1911 to 92,000 in 1938. The finances suffered no corresponding decrease. The amount contributed by the churches as reported in 1911 was $174,000, and in 1938 it was $274,000. In the period between 1925 and 1938 the number of elementary schools decreased from 419 with 57,000 pupils, to 232 with 44,000 pupils.

In Trinidad and Tobago we have figures only for the years 1925 and 1938. In that period the number of ordained foreign missionaries increased from 46 to 68, and of ordained national pastors decreased from 87 to 59, while the number of churches increased from 54 to 181. This means that a smaller number of ordained pastors shepherded a larger number of churches, and at the same time the offerings of the churches increased from $61,000 to $121,000.

In the Lesser Antilles the same decline in the number both of ordained foreign missionaries and of national pastors is seen, but here there has been a decline in church membership from 61,000 in 1925 to 53,000 in 1938, but, strange to say, an increase of offerings from $41,000 to $183,000, which may be explained by defective reports.

In the Bahama Islands a very definite decline is noticed both in the number of pastors, foreign and national, and in the number of churches and in church-membership. In 1911 there were 35 ordained foreign missionaries and 33 national pastors; in 1938 there were 17 ordained missionaries and 7 national pastors, and the membership of the churches had declined from 19,000 to 15,000. Here also there has been an increase of the offerings in spite of this decline in membership.

In Cuba, Puerto Rico, and Hispaniola the very marked decrease of foreign missionaries, together with the large increase in national pastors indicates a trend toward self-support and self-direction. That there has not been a corresponding increase in the number of pupils in mission schools, is undoubtedly due in part to economic conditions and in part to development of government schools.

During the past decade there was organized the Evangelical Church of Puerto Rico, which included churches affiliated with two denominations, the Congregational Christian and the United Brethren.

In 1920 the Board for Christian Work in Santo Domingo was organized in which the Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal, and United Brethren Boards combined their resources under one administration for the organization of the national church.

The small number of students reported in the theological schools is not sufficient to supply replacements, and consequently occasion is given for the employment of pastors deficient in training. On the other hand the small matriculation is evidence of high academic standards for the ministry.

The 1938 statistics to which this article refers are to be found in the following tables: Table I—Church on the Field, pp. 77-79; Table II—Foreign Staff, pp. 115-117; Table III—Finance, pp. 155-157; Table IV—Educational, pp. 188-190, 194, 199, 203, 207, 210; Table V—Medical, p. 230; Table VI—Philanthropic, p. 235.
